—An edition of The Circleville Herald 100 years old, on April 12, 1828, contained this bit of interesting information:

OHIO CANAL

We have the satisfaction of now announcing to our readers, that Mr. Williams, Acting Canal Commissioner, Judge Bates, Principal Engineer, have arrived at this place and have been engaged for several days in ascertaining the levels and distances, on several lines in this vicinity, as data on which to prepare the estimates preparatory to a final and permanent location. Our readers will remember that it has been determined to cross the Scioto by means of an aqueduct and the present examinations are directed to ascertain the most advantageous point for the crossing.

The board is expected to meet here about the middle of May—the letting of contracts will take place the latter part of May or the first of June.

NEW LIGHTS TO COST $10,911

ESTIMATE IS PREPARED ON STREET PLAN

Seventy Boulevard Lamps Can Be Installed in Circleville, For Sum.

Estimates prepared on the cost of an extensive downtown boulevard lighting system in Circleville and submitted to the Ohio Utilities company and a group of interested citizens Thursday afternoon, by the Westinghouse company, discloses the fact that this city can erect 70 ornamental lamps, installed and ready to light for less than $11,000—or $10,911.15.

This figure would take care of lights from Scioto to Pickaway streets on Main from Mound to High street on Court.

Cost $155.87 Each

The lamps would cost but $155.87 each, installed, and the total figure of over $10,000 for the 70 lamps makes the stories reported in the city that they would cost from $50,000 to $70,000 seem ridiculous.

These are the finest type of boulevard lights made, although the 70 lamps can be erected at a total saving of $500 less by buying a cheaper grade of standard to hold the illuminator.

Should approximately three-fourths of the property owners having buildings fronting where the lamps would be installed agree to pay a foot frontage of $2.08 these lamps could easily be paid for. Stretched over a period of ten years, this front footage would cost but $6 per year for a man owning a 30-foot frontage.

But $6 Per Year

It is pointed out that the boulevard lights will more than increase the property value of such a 30-foot frontage to the trifling cost of but $6 a year.

Efforts will be made to have the boulevard lighting system installed here, if it is possible to get the consent of progressive property owners to take the small assessment and with the city, which should pay the cost of lamps at alleys and intersections, help to pay the $10,000 over a period of ten years.

All cities surrounding Circleville now have the boulevard lighting system and at a cost of $1,000 per year for installation for ten years these lamps can be put in here.

The present cost of downtown lighting is around $600 per year. The cost of the new system, burning half the boulevard lights all night and all of them until midnight, would add but $2400 to the city's lighting bill per year and would be more than paid for by the increased valuation of property along well-lighted streets

FUNDS PILING UP THAT FALL HAD OBTAINED

From Harry Sinclair on or About Time Teapot Dome Was Leased.

By GEORGE E. DURNO
J. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 13—Another $35,000 was piled onto the growing total of money former secretary of Interior Albert B. Fall got from Harry F. Sinclair at or about the time the Teapot Dome naval oil reserve was leased, as the government continued prosecution of its criminal conspiracy case against the oil man today.

Prosecutor Owen J. Roberts produced witnesses who told of Sinclair giving Fall that amount for a trip to Russia in the summer of 1923.

This brought the grand total of money passing between the two thus far uncovered to $339,100. The government contends Sinclair was bribing Fall for the oil lease.

Roberts plans to place E. L. Doheny Jr., on the stand as his final witness. The son of the oil man who leased the Elk Hills reserve and thereby got himself into trouble with Fall, will be asked to tell the jury about the $100,000 "Little black satchel" transaction between his father and the ex-cabinet officer.

The elder Doheny called it "A loan." The government called it a bribe. Young Doheny carried the famous "little black bag" containing the cash from his father to Fall.

Roberts' idea is to convince the jury that Fall was in a thoroughly corrupt state of mind at the time he was leasing the oil reserves. He will experience plenty of opposition however as the defense will challenge Doheny's testimony as irrelevant to the Teapot Dome conspiracy.

SUBMIT WORLD TREATY PLANS TO COUNTRIES

United States Offers Its Plans For National Policy to Nations.

By LAWRENCE SULLIVAN
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 13—The United States today submitted to the governments of Great Britain, Germany, Italy and Japan the proposal of Secretary of State Kellogg for a world-wide treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy.

With the approval of France, the American ambassadors at London, Rome, Berlin and Tokyo presented to the respective governments all the correspondence which has passed between France and the United States relative to the suggestion of Foreign Minister Briand of France, that France and the United States sign a treaty between themselves.

The Briand proposal was made last June. Kellogg suggested the principle be extended to all nations.

Wants War Abandoned

"The government of the United States desires to see the institution of war abolished and stands ready to conclude with the French, British, German, Italian and Japanese governments. A single multilateral treaty, open to subsequent adherence by any and all other governments, binding the parties thereto not to resort to war with one another," said identic notes submitted to each government.

The proposed treaty, a draft of which accompanied the correspondence, would be self-perpetuating.

Kellogg's suggested draft would pledge the signatories "that in the settlement or solution of all disputes be sought except or whatever nature," adjustment "shall never be sought except by pacific means."

Notes French Exceptions

In noting the exceptions made by France in her last note to Kellogg's demand for an unqualified declaration, the American text today reaffirms the view that no obligations of any power under the League of Nations covenant or security pact offer serious difficulty to the general treaty.

"My government has not conceded that such considerations necessitate any modification of its proposal," the note said. "It believes, moreover, that the execution between France, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Japan and the United States of a treaty solemnly renouncing war in favor of pacific settlement of international controversies would have tremendous moral effect and ultimately lead to the adherence of all the other governments of the world."

Diplomatic observers here foresee insuperable complications in the path of the proposed treaty and little hope is held in official circles that a treaty free from future entanglements can be drawn.

FRENCHMEN ARRIVE

PARIS, April 13—(INS)—The French aviators Dieudonne Costes and Joseph Lebrix, who are flying from Tokio to Paris, arrived at Aleppo today at 5 a. m.

CAPTAIN OF SHIP FIRST TO REPORT SEEING JUNKERS

(BULLETIN)

The American Radio Corporation this afternoon at 2:45 reported the Bremen plane with its three occupants had been sighted over Atlantic City.

The two world-wide telegraphic news services of The Circleville Herald, the International News Service and the United Press, could not confirm the report, however, and it is thought to be very improbable.

No further reports of the plane had been received up until 3:15 p. m. today.

HALIFAX, N. S., April 13 (1:10 P. M.)—That the Bremen with its human cargo of two Germans and one Irishman may be on its way to accomplishing the first trip from Europe to America in a non-stop flight, appeared likely this afternoon when three reports were received that the Junkers plane had been sighted.

The most authentic [illegible] came from Captain Barkhouse, of the Canadian government steamship, "Arras," who reported a plane flying high near his ship off the south coast of Nova Scotia which he said he was almost certain was the Bremen. The report came at noon today.

Reports from Lunenburg and Kingsport also stated a plane, thought to be the Bremen, had been sighted.

Weather conditions off the newfoundland coast were unfavorable. An 18 mile easterly wind was increasing in velocity and sleet fell during the morning. Visibility was only fair.

Just before departing from Baldonnel airdome at 12:28 yesterday morning (Eastern Standard time) Capt. Koehl said that he had fuel for 42 hours, but hoped to reach the American coast line by 6:38 a. m., Friday, (Eastern Standard time.)

NEW YORK, April 13 (INS)—The radio Corporation of America today denied a report that their Chatham, Mass., station had picked up a message from a ship at sea stating that a plane believed to be the Bremen had been sighted off Newfoundland at 5:30 this morning.

The report, emanating from Nahant, Mass., stated that the coast guard station there had intercepted the message.

MITCHEL FIELD, N. Y., April 13 (INS)—A great cheer went up from the packed crowds awaiting the arrival of the German trans-Atlantic fliers today when a Junkers monoplane, C-87, sister ship of the Bremen, swooped across the sky and landed.

Many of the spectators mistook the plane for the Bremen and there was a rush for the field, the police barely being able to keep the crowd back of the roped off landing enclosure.

The C-87, one of the three Junkers being held here for use as an escort when word of the Bremen is received, was merely changing its position on the field.

MITCHEL FIELD, N. Y. April 13 (INS)—Basing her statement on what was believed to be confidential information she had received, Miss Herta Junkers, daughter of the German airplane manufacturer, told International News Service at ten o'clock that she estimated the Bremen would reach here between twelve and one o'clock.

Miss Junkers said that Captain Koehl all along intended to take a northerly course across the Atlantic, flying a considerable distance south of Newfoundland and heading straight for Mitchel Feld.

NEW YORK, April 13—(INS)—Somewhere over the Atlantic, the trim, silver-gray Bremen was believed to be waging a grim fight against the elements today in the attempt of its three intrepid occupants to reach America in a westward flight.

The single-motored monoplane was last sighted at 7:25 a. m. (Irish time), yesterday morning as it disappeared in the mists over Aran Island at the entrance to Galway Bay on the west coast of Ireland.

When Captain Hermann Koehl Commandant James E. Fitzmaurice and Baron Ehrentried Von Huenfeld departed from the Baldonnel airfield at 7:28 a. m. yesterday on their daring venture weather reports indicated that conditions were perfect as far west as the mid-Atlantic.

Snow and Hail Follow

Wireless dispatches from a German ship in mid-Atlantic later indicated that snow and hail were falling and that a west wind of terrific velocity was blowing at the surface.

The Bremen may have avoided the particular storm area reported by the German ships or may have escaped the full strength of the wind by flying high.

FUNDS PILING UP THAT FALL HAD OBTAINED

By GEORGE E. DURNO

WASHINGTON, April 13—Another $35,000 was piled onto the growing total of money former secretary of Interior Albert B. Fall got from Harry F. Sinclair at or about the time the Teapot Dome naval oil reserve was leased, as the government continued prosecution of its criminal conspiracy case against the oil man today.

Prosecutor Owen J. Roberts produced witnesses who told of Sinclair giving Fall that amount for a trip to Russia in the summer of 1923.

This brought the grand total of money passing between the two thus far uncovered to $339,100. The government contends Sinclair was bribing Fall for the oil lease.

Roberts plans to place E. L. Doheny Jr., on the stand as his final witness. The son of the oil man who leased the Elk Hills reserve and thereby got himself into trouble with Fall, will be asked to tell the jury about the $100,000 "Little black satchel" transaction between his father and the ex-cabinet officer.

The elder Doheny called it "A loan." The government called it a bribe. Young Doheny carried the famous "little black bag" containing the cash from his father to Fall.

Roberts' idea is to convince the jury that Fall was in a thoroughly corrupt state of mind at the time he was leasing the oil reserves. He will experience plenty of opposition however as the defense will challenge Doheny's testimony as irrelevant to the Teapot Dome conspiracy.

SUBMIT WORLD TREATY PLANS TO COUNTRIES

United States Offers Its Plans For National Policy to Nations.

By LAWRENCE SULLIVAN

WASHINGTON, April 13 — The United States today submitted to the governments of Great Britain, Germany, Italy and Japan the proposal of Secretary of State Kellogg for a world-wide treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy.

With the approval of France, the American ambassadors at London, Rome, Berlin and Tokyo presented to the respective governments all the correspondence which has passed between France and the United States relative to the suggestion of Foreign Minister Briand of France, that France and the United States sign a treaty between themselves.

The Briand proposal was made last June. Kellogg suggested the principle be extended to all nations.

Wants War Abandoned

A single multilateral treaty, open to subsequent adherence by any and all other governments, binding the parties thereto not to resort to war with one another," said identic notes submitted to each government.

The proposed treaty, a draft of which accompanied the correspondence, would be self-perpetuating.

Kellogg's suggested draft would pledge the signatories "that in the settlement or solution of all disputes be sought except or whatever nature," adjustment "shall never be sought except by pacific means."

Notes French Exceptions

In noting the exceptions made by France in her last note to Kellogg's demand for an unqualified declaration, the American text today reaffirms the view that no obligations of any power under the League of Nations covenant or security pact offer serious difficulty to the general treaty.

"My government has not conceded that such considerations necessitate any modification of its proposal," the note said. As the day of closing draws near all candidates are in doubt. This cannot be eliminated, but the manner of awarding prizes will assure every candidate who has been really busy for the short time the campaign has been under way, a valuable prize. Anyone of the prizes will be handsome return for the work the majority of candidates have done. The winners of the two Grand Prizes will receive prizes the value of which is much in excess of the amount they could have earned in three times the time they have put in on the campaign. So it is easy to see that if a candidate makes up his or her mind to drop everything else for the next day and devote every moment to the gathering of subscriptions, they will not be a loser anyway whatever.

Don't let your efforts cease now. There are only a few hours left in which to win the prizes, just one day and it will mean more than you can think or see right now for the desired prize. The first prize will undoubtedly be won or lost during the next 28 hours, for some candidate will become over confident and slow up, or else will lose heart and quit and thereby lose the opportunity of a life time to win a

PICKAWAY PARKS ARE INSPECTED

Dr. Johnson of the state department of health, accompanied by Dr. George W. Heffner, county health physician, visited and inspected the parks in this county Thursday.

Five parks, which are public resorts were examined, including, Dewey, Wildwood, Scippo, Logan Elm and The Scioto trail camp, just north of the city.

The state will demand that all public resorts obtain licenses this year before opening their places of business. These resorts will be under state supervision and will have to be kept clean and hygienic hereafter or they will be closed.

The proprietors of these resorts are urged to wake up before it is too late, and have their places looking clean, and kept clean, or they will be padlocked.

CAPTAIN OF SHIP FIRST TO REPORT SEEING JUNKERS

(BULLETIN)

The American Radio Corporation this afternoon at 2:45 reported the Bremen plane with its three occupants had been sighted over Atlantic City.

The two world-wide telegraphic news services of The Circleville Herald, the International News Service and the United Press, could not confirm the report, however, and it is thought to be very improbable.

No further reports of the plane had been received up until 3:15 p. m. today.

HALIFAX, N. S., April 13 (1:10 P. M.)—That the Bremen with its human cargo of two Germans and one Irishman may be on its way to accomplishing the first trip from Europe to America in a non-stop flight, appeared likely this afternoon when three reports were received that the Junkers plane had been sighted.

The most authentic [illegible] came from Captain Barkhouse, of the Canadian government steamship, "Arras," who reported a plane flying high near his ship off the south coast of Nova Scotia which he said he was almost certain was the Bremen. The report came at noon today.

Reports from Lunenburg and Kingsport also stated a plane, thought to be the Bremen, had been sighted.

Weather conditions off the newfoundland coast were unfavorable. An 18 mile easterly wind was increasing in velocity and sleet fell during the morning. Visibility was only fair.

Just before departing from Baldonnel airdome at 12:28 yesterday morning (Eastern Standard time) Capt. Koehl said that he had fuel for 42 hours, but hoped to reach the American coast line by 6:38 a. m., Friday, (Eastern Standard time.)

NEW YORK, April 13 (INS)—The radio Corporation of America today denied a report that their Chatham, Mass., station had picked up a message from a ship at sea stating that a plane believed to be the Bremen had been sighted off Newfoundland at 5:30 this morning.

The report, emanating from Nahant, Mass., stated that the coast guard station there had intercepted the message.

MITCHEL FIELD, N. Y., April 13 (INS)—A great cheer went up from the packed crowds awaiting the arrival of the German trans-Atlantic fliers today when a Junkers monoplane, C-87, sister ship of the Bremen, swooped across the sky and landed.

Many of the spectators mistook the plane for the Bremen and there was a rush for the field, the police barely being able to keep the crowd back of the roped off landing enclosure.

The C-87, one of the three Junkers being held here for use as an escort when word of the Bremen is received, was merely changing its position on the field.

MITCHEL FIELD, N. Y. April 13 (INS)—Basing her statement on what was believed to be confidential information she had received, Miss Herta Junkers, daughter of the German airplane manufacturer, told International News Service at ten o'clock that she estimated the Bremen would reach here between twelve and one o'clock.

Miss Junkers said that Captain Koehl all along intended to take a southerly course across the Atlantic, flying a considerable distance south of Newfoundland and heading straight for Mitchel Feld.

NEW YORK, April 13— (INS) —Somewhere over the Atlantic, the trim, silver-gray Bremen was believed to be waging a grim fight against the elements today in the attempt of its three intrepid occupants to reach America in a westward flight.

The single-motored monoplane was last sighted at 7:25 a. m. (Irish time), yesterday morning as it disappeared in the mists over Aran Island at the entrance to Galway Bay on the west coast of Ireland.

When Captain Hermann Koehl, Commandant James E. Fitzmaurice and Baron Ehrenfried Von Huenfeld departed from the Baldonnel airfield at 5:38 a. m., yesterday on their daring venture, weather reports indicated that conditions were perfect as far west as the mid-Atlantic.

Snow and Hail Follow

Wireless dispatches from a German ship in mid-Atlantic later indicated that snow and hail were falling and that a west wind of terrific velocity was blowing at the surface.

The Bremen may have avoided the particular storm area reported by the German ships or may have escaped the full strength of the wind by flying high.

HERMIT IS SHOT

BELLAIRE, O., April 13—(INS) — Thomas McMannus, aged hermit, who several years ago was tortured by robbers attempting to find a sum of money which he is supposed to keep concealed in his hut near here, today was in a hospital with a serious bullet wound inflicted by two other robbers yesterday. Whether the bandits obtained his money has not been learned.

Work until the last moment, then should you fail you will have the satisfaction of knowing that it was not through any fault of yours. Those who follow this plan will in all probability swing under the wire happy winners at the close. It is a sure thing the winner of the Buick will have adopted every single moment during the last few hours to the getting of subscriptions.

The last vote offer announced last week, has met with the expected popular approval and while it is smaller than any previous offer yet is liberal enough that any candidate in the race might win if they get in on the high bonus ballots. Don't fail to make the Big Extra Ballot if you possibly can. It will without a doubt be the means of saving the Buick car for you The opportunity is placed before you. It is now straight up to the candidate to decide who will win.

Be sure to bring in your reserve vote along with your report for the week on Saturday evening Remember if your reserve votes are not brought in on time they will not be counted so make plans to be here on time. Every candidate must be at the Circleville Herald and Union Herald-Watchman office at seven o'clock and have their report blanks fully made out and cash to balance Make your last hours count and count big.

MANNER OF CLOSING

The campaign will close in the following manner: Read this paragraph carefully so no misunderstanding will result. Every candidate will work hard every hour from now until Saturday, April 14, at 7 p. m. The campaign manager will receive subscriptions and votes right up until the last hour. Then a halt will be called on the soliciting, and every candidate must be at the office ready to make their final settlement. At the hour of seven, the writer will announce that the campaign is closed, and every candidate who has not turned in their subscriptions and deposited their votes in the ballot box will be given that opportunity.

Remember, each candidate will be given One chance and Only One to make their last settlement. After you have turned over your last report and paid for the subscriptions thereon, you will be given an envelope and told to put all of your reserve votes and votes secured on the last offer into it, to seal it and deposit it in the ballot box. After each candidate has had their chance to make their final settlement the keys to the ballot box will be given to the judges chosen to make the final count and the tabulation will begin.

The candidate must have their reserve votes at the office with their last report to turn in at seven o'clock. If subscriptions and votes are mailed and received after the campaign closes at seven o'clock they will not be counted, obviously then, you Must either be here yourself or have a representative on hand with your final report and reserve votes.

Candidates will run no risk whatever in turning over their subscriptions for no one will have the slightest opportunity to know what some other candidate has turned in No one will have the slightest hint given them; it will simply be a case of going to it hard right up until the last minute — then the high candidate will win. By following this plan of procedure, everyone will be waited upon in due time and all will be given a square deal, but remember you must be at the office at seven o'clock and remain there until you can be waited upon. This is absolutely necessary.

$250 in subscriptions will mean 575,000 extra votes.
$275 in subscriptions will mean 650,000 extra votes.
$300 in subscriptions will mean 750,000 extra votes.

REMEMBER, this offer is for either new or old subscriptions and must be turned in accordingly. This offer lasts until the last day of the campaign, April 14. Don't fail to land the big bonus.

AGRICULTURAL BILL IS PASSED; UP TO HOUSE

Farm Relief Measure Headed For Coolidge Again After First Veto.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 13—The battle-scarred McNary-Haugen farm bill, a football of big time politics for several years, was headed straight for President Coolidge's desk notwithstanding the warning signals hoisted against it by the White House.

Its passage in the Senate by the surprising vote of 53 to 23 was accomplished under the adroit generalship of vice president Charles G. Dawes, ably assisted by those who do not want to see Herbert Hoover nominated for president at the Kansas City convention.

It now goes to the House, where its passage also is considered assured. Its sponsors hope to have it through the lower chamber and deposited on the White House doorstep by May 1.

"I do not think it will take us long to reach a decision," said Rep. Haugen (R) of Iowa, co-author of the bill.

That a veto awaits it at the White House is universally accepted in Washington. The president vetoed the bill a year ago, denouncing it as few Presidents have ever denounced any legislation. Since that time numerous changes have been made in it to meet presidential objections, but the equalization fee, of which Mr. Coolidge particularly disapproved, remains in it. The farm bloc considers the equalization fee "the heart of the bill."

It is questionable whether the measure can be passed over a presidential veto. The Senate vote indicated that it can be, but with the full membership of the Senate present and voting it might be a different story. Also, while the bill is assured of passage in the House by a substantial majority, it is doubtful whether two-thirds of the full membership could be mustered for veto duty.

The Coolidge veto is calculated to be embarrassing to the Hoover candidacy.

DOCTORS FROM COUNTY TO BE AT OHIO MEET

Dr. C. C. Kirk to Address Gathering of Medics in Cincinnati.

More than one thousand physicians from Chio and neighboring states are expected to attend the 82nd annual meeting of the Ohio State Medical association, which is to be held at the Hotel Gibson, Cincinnati, May 1, 2 and 3.

It is through this annual gathering that the Buckeye physicians exchange experiences of the past year, outline advances made in medicine, discuss problems confronting medical practice, formulate policies for the coming year and elect officers to administer the affairs of the organization.

Over one hundred Ohio physicians and six out-of-state physicians are scheduled to participate on the scientific program which will include discussions on the latest advances in medicine for the care and treatment of disease and injury and the protection of public health. The scientific assembly is divided into six sections — medicans; surgery, eye, ear; nose and throat; obstetrics and pediatrics; nervous and mental; public health and industrial medicine.

In addition to the scientific program, there will be business meetings of the House of Delegates, the governing body of the association: general sessions, annual orations in medicine and surgery; the eighth annual golf tournament; clinics; fraternity, class and college reunions and numerous social activities.

Dr. Leslie L. Bigelow, Columbus, retires as president at the Cincinnati meeting. He will be succeeded by Dr. Charles W. Stone, Cleveland, president-elect.

Pickaway county will be represented at the eighty-second annual meeting by the officers and several members of the Pickaway County Medical society. Officers of this society include: Drs. J. B. May, New Holland, president; Lloyd Jonnes, Circleville, secretary; Howard Jones, Circleville, delegate and A. W. Holman, Circleville, alternate.

AGRICULTURAL BILL IS PASSED; UP TO HOUSE

Farm Relief Measure Headed For Coolidge Again After First Veto.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, April 13—The battle-scarred McNary-Haugen farm bill, a football of big time politics for several years, was headed straight for President Coolidge's desk notwithstanding the warning signals hoisted against it by the White House.

Its passage in the Senate by the surprising vote of 53 to 23 was accomplished under the adroit generalship of vice president Charles G. Dawes, ably assisted by those who do not want to see Herbert Hoover nominated for president at the Kansas City convention.

It now goes to the House, where its passage also is considered assured. Its sponsors hope to have it through the lower chamber and deposited on the White House doorstep by May 1.

"I do not think it will take us long to reach a decision," said Rep. Haugen (R) of Iowa, co-author of the bill.

That a veto awaits it at the White House is universally accepted in Washington. The president vetoed the bill a year ago, denouncing it as few Presidents have ever denounced any legislation. Since that time numerous changes have been made in it to meet presidential objections, but the equalization fee, of which Mr. Coolidge particularly disapproved, remains in it. The farm bloc considers the equalization fee "the heart of the bill."

It is questionable whether the measure can be passed over a presidential veto. The Senate vote indicated that it can be, but with the full membership of the Senate present and voting it might be a different story. Also, while the bill is assured of passage in the House by a substantial majority, it is doubtful whether two-thirds of the full membership could be mustered for veto duty.

The Coolidge veto is calculated to be embarrassing to the Hoover candidacy.

Home Is the Place—Nothing Behind the Curtains of Sin

IS THIS "GAY LIFE" SO GAY AFTER ALL?

Winifred Black Wonders at the Interest Shown by Respectable Women in the Doings of Outcast Sisterhood.

By WINIFRED BLACK

SO THEY'RE taking off the play, are they? It is indecent, they say, so they are going to close the theatre. Dear, dear, what a pity!

Now we shan't know how all the ladies of uneasy virtue look at life!

WINIFRED BLACK

I heard a number of women talking about the play at a luncheon the other day. They were all thrilled by it. They said it was pitiful. They said it was tragic. They said it was touching They said it was "so true." They said they had never realized how much of the mother there was in all these unfortunates who make their living in the drab streets of great cities

Generous, high-minded, noble creatures! Driven by the whips of destiny into an unfortunate way of life.

They pitied them. They sympathized with them, and strangely enough I felt as if some of the most correct of the women there envied the fallen sisterhood just the least little bit in the world.

"What on earth is the matter with these women, anyhow?" said the stray man who got away from the table as soon as he could.

Decent women, they were. Nice, kindly creatures, without a care in the world—why did they love to hear all about the life of the gutter? Now I've known a good many of these "romantic" beings and they always seem to me like poor things who were either too lazy or too dumb to work for a living. I can't see anything so very romantic about that, can you?

And I began to think about the Masque Ball. I went to the Masque Ball once, years and years ago, when I thought the "Gay Life" was really gay.

And, oh, what a disappointment it was! So dull! So stupid! Nothing doing! Why, a Sunday School picnic was noisier and livelier.

But when I went to the dressing room to ease my sorrows by retirement from the gay world which was really anything but gay, a large person dressed as an ostrich—all in white ostrich plumes I mean diamonds—said to me:

"Don't worry, dearie. They ain't waked up yet. Wait till the corks begin to pop."

But when the corks began to pop, people quarreled, and some cried and some went to sleep, and it was rather dull anyhow

Great disappointment, the "Gay Life." It's so terribly dull, as a rule I wonder why all the "respectable" are so interested in it at a distance?

I heard a woman who has been very "gay" all her life say she'd go to work if she could get a job at decent wages.

"Twenty dollars a week," she said. "That's what they offered me. Why, you can't get a decent pair of shoes for that."

And as she talked, a little woman came across the street wheeling a baby carriage. It was a sort of disreputable baby carriage that had seen a good deal of use, and walking on either side of it was a child—a little boy on one side and a little girl on the other. Nice, chubby, rosy little rascals, both of them. And the woman who was pushing the baby carriage was young, and she was pretty, and her eyes laughed. But dear me, what shabby shoes she was wearing! She never paid twenty dollars a pair for them—never in the world. Yet she seemed to be having quite a good time in life, anyhow.

Poor thing, what a lot she missed, didn't she? She and her baby carriage, and her sturdy boy, and her happy little girl, and her rosy baby; and the husband, somewhere, at work, who loves her and works for her and for his children.

I wonder if she loves to see plays and read stories about the "Gay Life" of the Underworld?

And if she does, I wonder why?

Fashion Favoring Sports Suits for Town

Two Models of Equal Favor Developed in Light-weight Materials.

By Marie Marot

FOR town wear nothing is better than a trim suit in some light woolen material. To the left may be seen an exponent of the short-coat suit, not as much in evidence this season as the three-quarter or seven-eighths coat, but nevertheless good. It is made of a soft beige tweed, with Tuxedo revers growing into pockets on either side and rows of flat pleating giving a pleasing effect of length. A tweed belt and hem and neckline serve to make the blouse "of a piece" with the suit.

A beige felt hat, edged and banded in brown cire ribbon may be combined admirably with this costume.

To the left may be seen a seven-eighths ensemble made in a light-weight broadcloth in gray with darker gray striping.

Gray, it will be noticed, is fast gaining in popularity over the favored beige of last season. A latitudinal employment of the stripes occurs in blouse and skirt, varying the up and down effect of the coat and creating greater interest. Latitudinal stripes also occur on the pockets and cuffs of the coat which is lined with the wood-violet crepe of the blouse.

Among the particularly noticeable departures in this mode is the absence of fur, novel treatment depending almost entirely upon lining and amusing uses of scanning and stitching. Another noteworthy feature is the use of silver and gold threads woven into sweater blouses to be worn with such costumes The point of the V-neck is often defined with a smooth brass or nickel ornament.

STRIKE A BALANCE IN WORK AND PLAY

Specialized Work of Modern World Has a Tendency to Make Human Machines of Most Industrial People.

By DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

OUR work nowadays tends to be specialized. Often it is so specialized that we must do something to counterbalance it lest we become too one-sided.

In the old days, when a shoemaker made a pair of shoes from start to finish, he had reason for honest pride in his achievement. He looked at his work and saw that it was good.

DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

But nowadays when shoemaking has been subdivided into sixty-four distinct procedures, carried on by as many different men, there is great danger that the worker lose all interest in his task.

You cannot gain much satisfaction from your work when all you do is to stamp eyelets into a piece of leather, repeating the task with maddening iteration hundreds of times a day.

Your only cause for pride is in increasing your dexterity, accuracy and speed—in fact making yourself as much like a machine as possible. Intelligence is discounted. An untiring automaton achieves the best result and the largest yield.

Unfortunately, this is an apparently unavoidable evil of our modern industrial development. From the standpoint of the quantity and quality of the article turned out no valid objection can be raised.

But from the worker's side such subordination to machinery and organization is monotonous, uninspiring and deadening.

A person whose work is governed by such conditions must try in every way he can to combat these debilitating influences upon his character and personality.

It must be remembered that in a job that is purely mechanical, comparatively little energy is used.

When once the individual has become practiced, such kinds of work are less exhausting than work which demands closer concentration, greater alertness, and a constant shifting of attention.

There remains unused, therefore, a residuum of energy, which can and should be spent in counteracting activities that will keep the worker from becoming physically and mentally lop-sided and in aiding him to live a full and normal life.

Such workers, therefore, should learn how to get the most out of their leisure. They should adopt a hobby. They should have plenty of diversion.

For indoor workers outdoor recreation is best. They must learn how to refresh and reinvigorate their brain. They must find out the best way to play

Otherwise the work will get them. They will undoubtedly deteriorate mentally unless counterbalancing influences are brought into operation.

They will become machines themselves. The meaning of life will cease to be.

Mechanical work must be matched with the human equation.

Make this human equation supreme.

GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silver

The Two Little Cricket Ladies.

"DEARIE-ME," sighed Little Brown Cricket as she shivered in the cool breeze, "I do think we're foolish for trying to live out here in the field all Winter. I've done it for several seasons. I'm not going to do it this year. I was talking to my cousin, Mrs. Cockroach, the other day, and she said it was certainly lovely and warm in the white farmhouse."

"Yes," sighed her little neighbor, Mrs. Black Cricket. Folks called her Black Cricket, not because she was really black in color, but just because her gown was darker than her neighbor's. "Well, it would be lovely not to be compelled to dig one's home every year. It must be nice to live in someone's fireplace. I don't mind trying it if you think the folks who live in the house wouldn't object."

"What good would it do if they did object?" exclaimed Mrs. Brown Cricket "They would have to run fast to catch us. Well, I'm off for the white house. How about you?"

"And I'm right with you," laughed her neighbor, and away the two Cricket Ladies started for the little white house. They hadn't gone far when they met Hoppy Toad, and when they told her where they were going she tried to discourage them.

"Better be glad you have claws with which to build a place for yourselves," she croaked. "It's folks just like you who always get into trouble because you shirk work."

"You stay and catch your death of cold," chirped Mrs. Brown Cricket, and away they skipped over the meadows

Reaching the little white house, they hopped around to the kitchen door, where they soon found their cousin, Mrs. Cockroach. She led them into the kitchen without stopping to warn them of the red-faced cook. Mrs. Brown Cricket was so excited looking around she began to chirp loudly and before she knew it Mrs. Cook's foot almost cracked the breath out of her.

Mrs. Cockroach ran under the sink and called the two Cricket Ladies They crawled under the sink, and there they huddled until the cook went into the other door.

"Now run for the fireplace," whispered Mrs. Cockroach, "and whatever you do, don't make any noise until after the family has gone to bed."

The two Cricket Ladies crawled under the door and hurried over to the fireplace and everything would have been all right if Black Cricket hadn't taken it into her head to sing. She crawled out on the mantle and began singing at the top of her voice.

Red Face Cook heard the chirping and before the Cricket Ladies knew what was going on they were both gathered up in the dust cloth and dumped out of doors.

Red Rooster spied them and it was all they could do to scramble under an old tin can. There they had to sit until Red Rooster went away. Then out the two little Cricket Ladies crawled and hurried back to the meadows.

"I guess after all we're better off right here where we belong," sighed Brown Cricket. She went to work and made a comfy little home down in the ground under the root of a tree. Mrs. Black Cricket soon made her a home in the ground and that was the last time anyone ever saw the two Cricket Ladies traveling towards the white farmhouse.

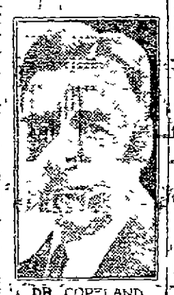
Palsy Not So Formidable as It Appears

By DR. ROYAL S COPELAND, M. D.,

United States Senator from New York, Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.



DR. COPELAND

A LADY has written me twice, she says, asking for an article on "Parkinson's disease." I beg pardon for overlooking the first letter—apparently it went astray. Anyhow I hasten to comply with this request.

The common name for this ailment is "shaking palsy." The doctors call it "paralysis agitans."

The chief symptom is the rhythmic, regular trembling of certain muscles There may be nodding of the head, or shaking of the hands The tremor never stops after it becomes established In the beginning it may be controlled by effort of will.

Shaking palsy is rarely met before the age of fifty. It attacks men more frequently than women. It is almost never seen in persons under forty Hard mental work, fear, anxiety, shock to the nervous system from any cause, are the chief causes. It sometimes follows an injury.

Before the marked symptoms of Parkinson's disease are noted, there may be signs of a disturbed nervous system. A person heretofore, good-natured and calm, may become cross and irritable.

There is often an inability to sleep. For hours the sufferer lies awake, tossing about the bed. A third symptom which may be observed before the trembling and shaking are noticed is weakness of the arms and legs

It is not uncommon to have a peculiar motion of the fingers The thumb rests against the forefinger and there is a restlessness of thumb and finger with a motion as if the victim were rolling a pill between them.

But the trouble does not stop here. The tremors travel up the arm and perhaps involve the leg on the same side. It is not long before the limbs of the other side take on the movements.

As the palsy progresses, the head is bowed and the body bent The elbows are bent and stand out from the body.

As the victim attempts to walk his movements become a rapid trot There is difficulty in stopping after once getting in motion.

The face muscles grow stiff After a while the expression is fixed like a mask.

At first the speech is slow and monotonous in tone. Later it is hurried.

Fortunately the disease rarely proves fatal. It runs a chronic course and some acute illness is responsible for serious results.

I have described shaking palsy more for the sake of general information than for any other purpose. Treatment is far from satisfactory, but after all this is not a thing to lament. Since there is very likely to be no serious effect, the only thing to mourn over is the embarrassing tremor. The family and friends learn to disregard this symptom and the afflicted one forgets it

The simple rules of hygiene, plain food, fresh air, sunlight and the other practices everybody should follow, are the important things to remember by the person troubled with Parkinson's disease.

HOME-MAKING HELPS

By Wanda Barton

Guest Room Novelties.

THOSE of us who have houses even large apartments, still have guest rooms Entertaining is a joy to the socially inclined and they will have company stay overnight if they have to sleep on the couch in the living-room If, however, we have the real guest room there are many charming things in the shops to add to the comfort one desires for guests.

We take for granted the fact that the room is attractively furnished harmoniously decorated, well lighted with a soft reading light on the bedside table, beside the water bottle and glass on a tray and the little smoking outfit. We hope that extra blanket on the closet shelf is not forgotten, nor the writing materials on the desk. Plenty of towels insures personal comfort and may be carried to and from the bathroom, unless the room has an adjoining bath all its own Should there be several doors on the hall a little distinctive knocker fastened on the particular door will aid the guest in pointing the way.

Every upstairs hall should have a night light in it, especially near a bathroom door. One hostess tacks on the door, inside, a little card telling of meal hours, train and mail times, and any other information likely to be needed. Telegraph blanks, a book of stamps and all needed stationery should be in the desk. A Chinese cotton kimono in the closet is often a comfort if the baggage is late arriving, while a baggage rack is a positive necessity

Now for the notelets A most attractive bunch of violets to place on the dressing table is really a sewing kit in disguise All emergency needs may be pulled out from among the flowers and after use be slipped back into their own place in the bouquet. Then there is the hamper covered with waterproofed gingham which may be wiped off with a damp cloth to freshen it when desired.

Lovely to hang in the windows with the touch of greenery that makes it look homelike. Then there are gingham hat stands to stand on the closet shelf. He was also a composer of no mean ability and his first symphony, which he called "Nachklange von Ossian" was written in 1840. It was followed by the Comedia in C Minor, the Echoes of Tasso, and the Crusaders in Palestine.

Gade's compositions are full of melody and harmony and are characterized by a certain poetic quality. He was also a great violinist.

Love's Embers

Absorbing Sequel to "Revelations of a Wife"

By Adele Garrison

Madge Hears Words from Philip Veritzen That She Had Long Expected.

AS I listened to Philip Veritzen's complacent voice coolly reciting his plan to marry his son to the Princess Olina of Transvania, I mentally echoed the epithet of "silly old tuft hunter," which Lillian had applied to him a few minutes before. His comment that she might eventually share the throne of Transvania with Noel only strengthened my amused contempt at my employer's ambition to ally himself with royalty even by so fragile and easily broken a bond as a marriage with the self-exiled young princess.

It was not the first time that I had noticed this desire for association with titled people upon the part of my employer. The visit to America of the king and queen of Transvania, with its attendant social functions had seemed to take from Philip Veritzen the dignity which always had invested his position as the greatest dramatic producer of his time, and put him on a level with the wealthy sycophants who pulled every possible string to gain invitations to the affairs given for the royal visitors.

For he had missed no function given in their honor. In most cases he did not need to angle for invitations. His position and the fact that some years before he had made a large contribution to one of the pet charitable projects of the beautiful and spectacular queen, insured his being present at most of the affairs given for the royal couple. And for the others he had boldly maneuvered, causing many whispered comments, amazed, amused and contemptuous, among his associates.

"I do not often take the trouble to explain any action or decision of mine"—Mr Veritzen's voice, courteous, yet with a hint of metal in it, startled me out of my reverie. "But I have planned to tell you this story ever since the visit to New York of the King and Queen of Transvania. I did not wish you to keep in your mind the opinion of my—absurdity—which you must have formed at that time."

"Oh, I'm sorry I——" my voice trailed off lamely as my employer's keen eyes watched my face redden.

"Didn't think I knew what you were thinking of me?" There was a smile in his eyes now, and his voice had softened to a tone faintly suggesting a caress. "That, my dear — and valued colleague — is something I always shall know, not from my reason, but from my intuitions."

I stirred restlessly in my chair, for I am always vaguely apprehensive of any approach to sentiment upon the part of my employer And there was something in the way he had paused after the word "dear" which warned me that he was fully aware of every shade of meaning which his words or actions might imply. I could not delude myself with the notion that his interest in the story he was about to tell me might invest it with a personal touch which I could disregard. I must be prepared to meet with dignity any digression from his role, for I was sure that it would be a deliberate one.

"It is impossible," he went on, "for two people as closely associated in work as we are, to spend the time of our personality of temperament of ambitions, of likings to be otherwise than attuned to each other's mind and soul. IS THIS "GAY LIFE" SO GAY AFTER ALL?

Winifred Black Wonders at the Interest Shown by Respectable Women in the Doings of Outcast Sisterhood.

By WINIFRED BLACK

SO THEY'RE taking off the play, are they? It is indecent, they say, so they are going to close the theatre. Dear, dear, what a pity!

Now we shan't know how all the ladies of uneasy virtue look at life!

WINIFRED BLACK

I heard a number of women talking about the play at a luncheon the other day. They were all thrilled by it. They said it was pitiful. They said it was tragic. They said it was touching. They said it was "so true." They said they had never realized how much of the mother there was in all these unfortunates who make their living in the drab streets of great cities.

Generous, high-minded, noble creatures! Driven by the whips of destiny into an unfortunate way of life.

They pitied them. They sympathized with them, and strangely enough I felt as if some of the most correct of the woman there envied the fallen sisterhood just the least little bit in the world.

"What on earth is the matter with these women, anyhow?" said the stray man who got away from the table as soon as he could.

Decent women, they were. Nice, kindly creatures, without a care in the world—why did they love to hear all about the life of the gutter? Now I've known a good many of these "romantic" beings and they always seem to me like poor things who were either too lazy or too dumb to work for a living. I can't see anything so very romantic about that, can you?

And I began to think about the Masque Ball. I went to the Masque Ball once, years and years ago, when I thought the "Gay Life" was really gay.

And, oh, what a disappointment it was! So dull! So stupid! Nothing doing! Why, a Sunday School picnic was noisier and livelier.

But when I went to the dressing room to ease my sorrows by retirement from the gay world which was really anything but gay, a large person dressed as an ostrich—all in white ostrich plumes and diamonds—said to me:

"Don't worry, dearie. They ain't waked up yet. Wait till the begin to pop."

But when the corks began to pop, people quarreled, and some sat and some went to sleep, and it was rather dull anyhow.

Great disappointment, the "Gay Life." It's so terribly dull, as a rule. I wonder why all the "respectable" are so interested in it, at a distance?

I heard a woman who has been very "gay" all her life say she'd go to work if she could get a job at decent wages.

"Twenty dollars a week," she said. "That's what they offered me. Why, you can't get a decent pair of shoes for that."

And as she talked, a little woman came across the street wheeling a baby carriage. It was a sort of disreputable baby carriage that had seen a good deal of use, and walking on either side of it was a child—a little boy on one side and a little girl on the other. Nice, chubby, rosy little rascals, both of them. And the woman who was pushing the baby carriage was young, and she was pretty, and her eyes laughed. But dear me, what shabby shoes she was wearing! She never paid twenty dollars a pair for them—never in the world. Yet she seemed to be having quite a good time in life, anyhow.

Poor thing, what a lot she missed, didn't she? She and her baby carriage, and her sturdy boy, and her happy little girl, and her rosy baby; and the husband, somewhere, at work, who loves her and works for her and for his children.

I wonder if she loves to see plays and read stories about the "Gay Life" of the Underworld?

And if she does, I wonder why?

Fashion Favoring Sports Suits for Town

Two Models of Equal Favor Developed in Light-weight Materials.

By Marie Marot

FOR town wear nothing is better than a trim suit in some light woolen material. To the left may be seen an exponent of the short-coat suit, not as much in evidence this season as the three-quarter or seven-eighths coat, but nevertheless good. It is made of a soft beige tweed, with Tuxedo revers growing into pockets on either side and rows of flat pleating giving a pleasing effect of length. A tweed belt and hem and neckline serve to make the blouse "of a piece" with the suit.

A beige felt hat, edged and banded in brown cire ribbon may be combined admirably with this costume.

To the left may be seen a seven-eighths ensemble made in a light-weight broadcloth in gray with darker gray striping.

Gray, it will be noticed, is fast gaining in popularity over the favored beige of last season. A latitudinal employment of the stripes occurs in blouse and skirt, varying the up and down effect of the coat and creating greater interest. Latitudinal stripes also occur on the pockets and cuffs of the coat which is lined with the wood-violet crepe of the blouse.

Among the particularly noticeable departures in this mode is the absence of fur, novel treatment depending almost entirely upon lining and amusing uses of seaming and stitching. Another noteworthy feature is the use of silver and gold threads woven into sweater blouses to be worn with such costumes. The point of the V-neck is often defined with a smooth brass or nickel ornament.

STRIKE A BALANCE IN WORK AND PLAY

Specialized Work of Modern World Has a Tendency to Make Human Machines of Most Industrial People.

By DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

OUR work nowadays tends to be specialized. Often it is so specialized that we must do something to counterbalance it lest we become too one-sided.

In the old days, when a shoemaker made a pair of shoes from start to finish, he had reason for honest pride in his achievement. He looked at his work and saw that it was good.

DR. LOUIS E. BISCH

But nowadays when shoemaking has been subdivided into sixty-four distinct procedures, carried on by as many different men, there is great danger that the worker lose all interest in his task.

You cannot gain much satisfaction from your work when all you do is to stamp eyelets into a piece of leather, repeating the task with maddening iteration hundreds of times a day.

Your only cause for pride is in increasing your dexterity, accuracy and speed—in fact making yourself as much like a machine as possible. Intelligence is discounted. An untiring automaton achieves the best result and the largest yield.

Unfortunately, this is an apparently unavoidable evil of our modern industrial development. From the standpoint of the quantity and quality of the article turned out no valid objection can be raised.

But from the worker's side such subordination to machinery and organization is monotonous, uninspiring and deadening.

A person whose work is governed by such conditions must try in every way he can to combat these debilitating influences upon his character and personality.

It must be remembered that in a job that is purely mechanical, comparatively little energy is used.

When once the individual has become practiced, such kinds of work are less exhausting than work which demands closer concentration, greater alertness, and a constant shifting of attention.

There remains unused, therefore, a residuum of energy, which can and should be spent in counteracting activities that will keep the worker from becoming physically and mentally lop-sided and in aiding him to live a full and normal life.

Such workers, therefore, should learn how to get the most out of their leisure. They should adopt a hobby. They should have plenty of diversion.

For indoor workers outdoor recreation is best. They must learn how to refresh and reinvigorate their brain. They must find out the best way to play.

Otherwise the work will get them. They will undoubtedly deteriorate mentally unless counterbalancing influences are brought into operation.

They will become machines themselves. The meaning of life will cease to be.

Mechanical work must be matched with the human equation.

Make this human equation supreme.

GOOD-NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silver

The Two Little Cricket Ladies.

"DEARIE-ME," sighed Little Brown Cricket as she shivered in the cool breeze, "I do think we're foolish for trying to live out here in the field all Winter. I've done it for several seasons. I'm not going to do it this year. I was talking to my cousin, Mrs. Cockroach, the other day, and she said it was certainly lovely and warm in the white farmhouse."

"Yes," sighed her little neighbor, Mrs. Black Cricket. Folks called her Black Cricket, not because she was really black in color, but just because her gown was darker than her neighbor's. "Well, it would be lovely not to be compelled to dig one's home every year. It must be nice to live in someone's fireplace. I don't mind trying it if you think the folks who live in the house wouldn't object."

"What good would it do if they did object?" exclaimed Mrs. Brown Cricket. "They would have to run fast to catch us. Well, I'm off for the white house. How about you?"

"And I'm right with you," laughed her neighbor, and away the two Cricket Ladies started for the little white house. They hadn't gone far when they met Hoppy Toad, and when they told her where they were going she tried to discourage them.

"Better be glad you have claws with which to build a place for yourselves," she croaked. "It's folks just like you who always get into trouble because you shirk work."

"You stay and catch your death of cold," chirped Mrs. Brown Cricket, and away they skipped over the meadows.

Reaching the little white house, they hopped around to the kitchen door, where they soon found their cousin, Mrs. Cockroach. She led them into the kitchen without stopping to warn them of the red-faced cook. Mrs. Brown Cricket was so excited looking around she began to chirp loudly and before she knew it Mrs. Cook's foot almost knocked the breath out of her.

Mrs. Cockroach ran under the sink and called the two Cricket Ladies. They crawled under the sink, and there they huddled until the cook went into the other door.

"Now run for the fireplace," whispered Mrs. Cockroach, "and whatever you do, don't make any noise until after the family has gone to bed."

The two Cricket Ladies crawled under the door and hurried over to the fireplace and everything would have been all right if Black Cricket hadn't taken it into her head to sing. She crawled out on the mantle and began singing at the top of her voice.

Red Face Cook heard the chirping and before the Cricket Ladies knew what was going on they were both gathered up in the dust cloth and dumped out of doors.

Red Rooster spied them and it was all they could do to scramble under an old tin can. There they had to sit until Red Rooster went away. Then out the two little Cricket Ladies crawled and hurried back to the meadows.

"I guess after all we're better off right here where we belong," sighed Brown Cricket. She went to work and made a comfy little home down in the ground under the root of a tree. Mrs. Black Cricket soon made her a home in the ground and that was the last time anyone ever saw the two Cricket Ladies traveling towards the white farmhouse.

Palsy Not So Formidable as It Appears

By DR. ROYAL S COPELAND, M. D.

United States Senator from New York; Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

DR COPELAND

A LADY has written me twice, she says, asking for an article on "Parkinson's disease." I beg pardon for overlooking the first letter—apparently it went astray. Anyhow I hasten to comply with this request.

The common name for this ailment is "shaking palsy." The doctors call it "paralysis agitans."

The chief symptom is the rhythmic, regular, trembling of certain muscles. There may be nodding of the head, or shaking of the hands. The tremor never stops after it becomes established. In the beginning it may be controlled by effort of will.

Shaking palsy is rarely met before the age of fifty. It attacks men more frequently than women. It is almost never seen in persons under forty.

Hard mental work, fear, anxiety, shock to the nervous system from any cause, are the chief causes. It sometimes follows an injury.

Before the marked symptoms of Parkinson's disease are noted, there may be signs of a disturbed nervous system. A person heretofore, good-natured and calm, may become cross and irritable.

There is often an inability to sleep. For hours the sufferer lies awake, tossing about the bed. A third symptom which may be observed before the trembling and shaking are noticed, is weakness of the arms and legs.

It is not uncommon to have a peculiar motion of the fingers. The thumb rests against the forefinger and there is a restlessness of thumb and finger with a motion as if the victim were rolling a pill between them.

But the trouble does not stop here. The tremors travel up the arm and perhaps involve the leg on the same side. It is not long before the limbs of the other side take on the movements.

As the palsy progresses, the head is bowed and the body bent. The elbows are bent and stand out from the body.

As the victim attempts to walk his movements become a rapid trot. There is difficulty in stopping after once getting in motion.

The face muscles grow stiff. After a while the expression is fixed like a mask.

At first the speech is slow and monotonous in tone. Later it is hurried.

Fortunately the disease rarely proves fatal. It runs a chronic course and some acute illness is responsible for serious results.

I have described shaking palsy more for the sake of general information than for any other purpose. Treatment is far from satisfactory, but after all this is not a thing to lament. Since there is very likely to be no serious effect, the only thing to mourn over is the embarrassing tremor. The family and friends learn to disregard this symptom and the afflicted one forgets it.

The simple rules of hygiene, plain food, fresh air, sunlight and the other practices everybody should follow, are the important things to remember by the person troubled with Parkinson's disease.

HOME-MAKING HELPS

By Wanda Barton

Guest Room Novelties.

THOSE of us who have houses, even large apartments, still have guest rooms. Entertaining is a joy to the socially inclined and they will have company stay overnight if they have to sleep on the couch in the living-room. If, however, we have the real guest room there are many charming things in the shops to add to the comfort one desires for guests.

We take for granted the fact that the room is attractively furnished, harmoniously decorated, well lighted with a soft reading light on the bedside table, beside the water bottle and glass on a tray and the little smoking outfit. We hope that extra blanket on the closet shelf is not forgotten, nor the writing materials on the desk. Plenty of towels insures personal comfort, and may be carried to and from the bathroom, unless the room has an adjoining bath all its own. Should there be several doors on the hall a little distinctive knocker fastened on the particular door will aid the guest in pointing the way.

Every upstairs hall should have a night light in it, especially near a bathroom door. One hostess tacks on the door, inside, a little card telling of meal hours, train and mail times, and any other information likely to be needed. Telegraph blanks, a book of stamps and all needed stationery should be in the desk. A Chinese cotton kimono in the closet is often a comfort if the baggage is late arriving, while a baggage rack is a positive necessity.

Now for the novelties. A most attractive bunch of violets to place on the dressing table is really a sewing kit in disguise. All emergency needs may be pulled out from among the flowers and after use be slipped back into their own place in the bouquet. Then there is the hamper covered with waterproofed gingham which may be wiped off with a damp cloth to freshen it when desired.

Spain contributes charming little china flower holders, square, with two handles, with china pulley wheels through which to run the suspension cord. A wonderfully carved brown owl standing six inches tall conceals a ball of cord the end of which sticks out from his breast feathers. Under one wing a small pair of scissors find a concealed resting place.

On the shelf of the night table there is a special little tea service on a tray. The kettle has an electric attachment that may be plugged into the double socket above. Very comfy if one wants a plain cup of tea at any hour without troubling any one, or the frequent hot water before meals.

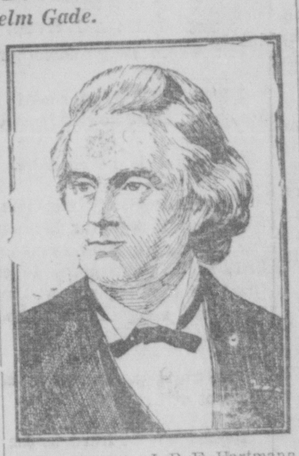
However, violin lessons and a frequent attendance at the theatre, served to strengthen his determination to become a musician.

He was placed under the instruction of Wexschall, then the leader of the court orchestra, and later under Wyse and Berggreen, but he was, to a great extent, self taught in theory.

At the age of sixteen, Gade appeared as a concert violinist. In 1841 his overture "Nachklange von Ossian" took first prize at the competition of the Copenhagen Music Society. This also won for the young composer the attention of the king, who gave Gade a stipend which enabled him to go to Leipzig and Italy. In 1842 the performance of one of Gade's symphonies by Mendelssohn paved the way for his favorable reception in Leipzig in 1842.

Gade's association with Schumann and Mendelssohn undoubtedly fanned his genius to a glowing flame. During Mendelssohn's absence Gade repeatedly conducted the Gewandhaus concerts and on Mendelssohn's death, succeeded him as regular conductor.

In 1852 Gade married the daughter of the composer, J. P. E. Hartmann.



Gade wielded a commanding influence over musical affairs in the Danish capital and was honored by the title of Professor, which was conferred upon him by the King. He was also honored by the University of Cambridge.

Gade was essentially a romanticist, but his music is finished and polished, lyrical rather than dramatic.

Gade died in Copenhagen on December 21, 1890.

Melting Fat Off Spine

By JOSEPHINE HUDDLESTON

TWIST, turn and squirm if you want to work off those pesky little pads of flesh that form on the small of the back at each side of the spine before they reach the mountainous proportions that spell FORTY, even though you are really only twenty-five or so!

Recently I saw a popular and wonderful actress very cleverly make quick turns about the stage so that, at no time during the performance, did the audience have the opportunity of seeing her figure from a straight sideview. And downright smart she was in making those carefully planned movements! For while she is forty the only give-away to that age is those fatty pouches in the back. I wondered—and still do for that matter—how a woman as intelligent as she is, knowing she had this very apparent give-away as to her age, didn't use that intelligence to take off the excess flesh instead of directing her energies toward fooling the audience. The amount of time and energy she devoted to maneuvering her movements so that we would be unable to see her as she really was would have eliminated the beauty problem she so successfully kept from us.

A simple exercise I know of, taken several time daily, would wear off this particular excess flesh within two or three weeks' time. And in the hope that you'll be intelligently sensitive about the matter if it applies to you, instead of foolishly sensitive, I'm going to pass on the information.

To do the exercise, stand erect, with the head up, the chest raised, the shoulders back, the heels about three inches apart and the toes pointing straight ahead. Now clasp the hands behind the head, resting the cupped palms against the neck and push back the elbows as far as you can without undue strain across the shoulders. Then, keeping the knees rigid, turn the upper part of the body as far to the right as you can, then as far to the left possible. Repeat twenty times.

Now, still retaining the original position, bend forward as far as you can and then bend backward until then as far to the left as possible. Repeat twenty times.

When you've mastered the twisting and the bending forward separately the whole routine can be done in one exercise by bending forward, twisting to the right, bending backward and twisting to the left. Straighten up between each movement and don't forget to keep the elbows back and the knees rigid!

A child born on this day will have many splendid talents and graces, fitting it for the higher and finer activities of life, where its success lies.

Advice to Girls

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl in my teens. I met a boy about four years my senior and went with him a while, but he has stopped calling. I do not know the reason. I see him almost every day and sometimes he acts very friendly. Please tell me how to regain his friendship, as I like him very much. Would it be improper to invite him to a party? ANXIOUS.

ANXIOUS: Yes, it would be quite proper for you to invite this boy to a party, and such an invitation may afford you the opportunity of readjusting matters so that your friendship progresses as it should. There must be some definite cause for this boy's changed attitude and by indicating your continued interest, you might be able to determine what it is and straighten things out so that you can enjoy each other's companionship again.

"MY ONE VOTE"

ONE of the influences that operates most powerfully to encourage people to neglect the civic duty of voting at primaries and elections, is the idea that, as many voters put it, "My one vote won't make any difference."

The neglectful citizen feels that when millions of people are voting in the presidential contest, his little ballot will never be missed. The result will be just the same, whether he fails or not.

How would that principle work if applied to all the duties of citizenship?

Suppose it was applied to the question of service in the recent war. The drafted man might say, "The little fighting I can do in this war will never make any difference. There will be plenty beside me to go and fight the Kaiser. I will evade the draft, as what little I could do would not effect the result any."

Uncle Sam would not take any stock in that plea. He would say if everyone used that argument, we should have no army at all, and the whole world could trample on us.

Or the individual taxpayer might say that his little ten or fifty dollar bill that he was assessed, would make no particular difference and wouldn't buy much, so that he need not make any return to his income. Also the government would make short work of that argument.

To get results in a community, everyone has to do his own part.

People use the excuse that their own lack of service will make no difference, the reply is that if everyone did that way, the government would go to smash. People who use that foolish argument as an excuse for not voting should be made to feel that the community does not approve of their idea. If we are going to have a country worth living in, everyone must do his part as if the Whole thing depended on him alone.

DR. JOHN A. TIGERT, director of the Federal Bureau of Education reveals the fact that a college education has a direct effect on the pay envelope.

Dr. Tigert didn't mention it, but a college education gives a man one more advantage. A man with a trained mind, broadened by contact with many phases of culture, can enjoy his life more. Not only can he make more money; he can be happier while he is making it.

A FLIGHT TO JAPAN

IF reports that say Col. Lindbergh is about to make a flight to Japan via the Hawaiian Islands are correct, the youthful aviator soon will be facing an undertaking more perilous than anything he has yet tried.

The flight from California to Hawaii is bad enough, although it probably would not be very terrifying to a man of Lindbergh's ability. But the second leg—from Honolulu to Tokio—is longer and more dangerous than any over-water flight anyone has attempted.

It is longer than Lindbergh's entire New York to Paris hop—and a good third of that was over land. If anyone but Lindbergh were trying it we would say it were a foolish undertaking.

If Lindbergh does make this flight to Japan he will dwarf all his previous achievements, great as they are.

"OLD MOTHER HUBBARD"

Leo Lomski Thinks Fighters Go Into the Ring to Fight

By DAVIS J. WALSH
I. N. S. Sports Editor

NEW YORK, April 13—That crude fellow from the west, Leo Lomski, simply will have to be taken aside and reasoned with in a nice fatherly way. He still thinks that fighters go into the ring to fight. He should know better by this time but apparently Leo is one of those simplex models who are a bit slow to grasp the new idea. Meantime, he is getting approximately nowhere in his quest of a championship title.

I don't say that Leo is deserving of one, at that. As a matter of fact, I rather clearly remember him being buffeted about in an extremely off hand manner by the current light heavyweight champion, Tommy Loughran, and it is my idea that Thomas can repeat the performance at any given, or taken, moment. The point is that there seems to be so little chance of the performance being repeated. Lomski has been cuddled and embraced out of another chance by the affectionate character of the men he has been meeting.

Winning Favor

It all began when he dropped Loughran twice in the first round of their title meeting. Everyone knew that Thomas was a hard man to hit and that, better still, he was a hard man to hurt. Enough! The living of Lomski commenced at that moment.

It is no reflection on Loughran that his was the first and warmest embrace. He had been hit violently upon the chin and didn't know what it was all about for the next four rounds. Instinct alone prompted him to hold as long as he felt himself in trouble.

Later, he punched Lomski all over the ring. But it was distance punching. Any time Leo became intimate, the champion just naturally tied him up like a package.

Leo, of course, likes to get in there before he does his swinging because his arms are short and clubby. It was simply his tough luck that the current champion had too much horse sense to play the game his way.

Luck, too, was against him in the McTigue match. He had been more or less forced to keep away from a veteran who had nothing except knowledge of how to avoid punishment. McTigue had been brash enough when he was in the midst of his fling a year ago but that knockout by Mickey Walker had convinced him it was all over and had sent him back to that old style of his. This consists largely of turning his back to opponent and giving him a large, unresilient shoulder blade for a target.

In consequence, the Lomski-McTigue affair was a terrible thing and the addicts, who had yammered over Leo's frolics with Yale Okun and hundred kindred souls and his knockdowns of Loughran, hastily lost much interest in the young man.

Retreating Fight

His next meeting was with Joe Sekyra. From all accounts, Joseph, too, had taken the matter of Lomski's messy ways to heart. For he is said to have fought a retreating fight most of the way, allowing Lomski to take the play away from him and holding ernestly when he might better have employed his time in hitting. Sekyra's straight punching style gave him a better natural advantage over Leo in this fight but the returns said that the Dayton entry declined to profit by the fact. It apparently wasn't much of a fight on that account.

As a result, Lomski is talking entering the heavyweight division. He is doing so, not because he feels he can't beat Loughran but because he doubts that he will fight him at all. Those uninteresting fights with McTigue and Sekyra have hurt Leo as a drawing card so much that another Loughran-Lomski match has become somewhat impractical from the standpoint of the box office. Incidentally, there may be several other standpoints but I know you will forgive me if I fail to recall just what they are.

TRANSFIGURATION AND SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 9:2-29.
GOLDEN TEXT—He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bear-eth much fruit; for apart from me ye can do nothing.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Shows His Glory.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Shows His Glory.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Faith and Prayer Can Do.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Meaning of the Transfiguration.

When Christ announced His death which was to take place on the cross, the disciples were unable to see how victory could issue from death. Jesus took with Him Peter, James and John into the mountains.

In order to revive their drooping spirits and restore their confidence He was transfigured before them. Two men from the upper world were sent to converse with Jesus about His approaching death at Jerusalem—the very thing about which the disciples refused to talk. The transfiguration is therefore a foregleam of the coming kingdom.

I. Jesus Christ Glorified on the Mountain (v. 2, 3).

He took the disciples "by themselves" and was "transfigured before them." This shows that the purpose of the transfiguration terminated upon the disciples and not on Christ. Christ's rebuke of Peter for his unwillingness to hear concerning His death apparently for a time estranged the disciples from Him. To heal this breach an unusual transaction was required. His shining raiment was typical of that glory which shall be manifest when Christ comes back to the earth. His appearance on the mountain typifies His visible appearance on the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4-9).

II. Peter, James and John Represent Israel in the Flesh in Connection With the Kingdom (v. 2).

Christ is peculiarly the King of Israel. According to Ezekiel 37:21-27, the Israelites are to be the central people of the kingdom. This people shall be gathered from among the nations and united as one in that kingdom, in their own country.

I. Moses and Elias Appeared in Glory With Jesus (vv. 4-13).

These men in the glorified state are typical of the state of the saints in glory. Moses, who was once denied an entrance into Palestine, appears now in glory representing the redeemed of the Lord who shall pass through death into the kingdom. Multitudes of the Lord's own who have fallen asleep shall be awakened at Christ's coming and pass into the kingdom. Elias represents the redeemed who shall pass into the kingdom through translation. Some shall be living upon the earth when the Lord shall come, and they, without dying, shall be changed and thus pass into the kingdom (I Cor. 15:50-54; I Thess. 4:14-18).

I. Peter's proposal (vv. 5, 6).

So definitely was the method of the kingdom unfolded before Peter that he proposed to erect tabernacles for Christ, Moses and Elijah. It is true that the unveiling of the majestic person of Christ and the panoramic display of the kingdom somewhat disconcerted Peter; yet he grasped its central meaning and proposed to celebrate the advent of the kingdom which had been prefigured in a tangible way.

2. The divine voice out of the cloud (vv. 7, 8).

God declared Jesus to be His beloved Son in whom He was well pleased. If one would know what is pleasing to God, let him study Jesus Christ, who perfectly did His Father's will.

3. Jesus' charge (vv. 9-13).

He charged them that they should tell no man concerning the things which they had seen until he had risen from the dead.

IV. A Demonstration of the Purpose of the Establishment of the Kingdom (vv. 14-29).

When they descended from the mountain of transfiguration they witnessed a great multitude in a state of perplexity. The immediate cause of this state was the grievous condition of a young man possessed of a demon (v. 18). The father of the young man had appealed to the disciples to cast the demon out, but they were unable to do so. When they brought him unto Jesus, the foul spirit was rebuked and came forth. This young man's state is representative of the nations who are oppressed by the devil. Just as this young man was grievously oppressed, causing him to cast himself into the fire and into the waters, so the nations today in their perplexity are doing the things which will result in their own destruction. The devil will be peculiarly active in the oppression of men and nations in the last days. This may account for the turmoil among the nations today.

"THE JAZZ SINGER," starring Al Jolson, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel. It is based upon the play by Samson Raphaelson.

SYNOPSIS

Jakie, son of Cantor Rabinowitz, preferring jazz to Synagogue music, leaves home. Ten years elapse. Through Mary Dale, a dancer, Jakie, now Jack Robin, becomes a jazz singer. The Cantor, discovering his son's profession, disowns him. Jack's show opens the Eve of Yom Kippur. Dillings, the backer of the show, withdraws his money, leaving Lee, the producer, dependent on Jack for success. The Cantor is ill. Mrs. Rabinowitz comes to dress rehearsal to beg her son to sing in the Synagogue. Unable to withstand her pleadings Jack returns home. Mary and Lee follow him to dissuade him. But as Jack sings in the temple the Cantor dies.

"If you think that boy's going to be a Cantor all his life you're very much mistaken," Mary answered vehemently. "He'll never stay down here. The trouble now is that he's under a very heavy, mental strain. He can't see things clearly. Wait until he comes to his senses."

"I don't agree with you," Lee sighed. "His career on the stage is ended. He'll never come back. This one incident is going to remain in his mind, and all his life will be one long Day of Atonement. This is in his blood—all this. He won't be able to get away from it."

"Yes, he will," Mary argued. "I'm going to see that he does. Give him another chance. He's a great actor and a great singer.

"Root for me, Mary, like you always do."

He's worth while. If I can get him to come back, will you reconsider about sending for Valentine?"

"Oh, I don't know." Lee was weary and tired. He got up and walked about the room. He looked at his watch. "Good Lord, it's almost eight o'clock. Look here. We're opening tonight. We've got to get up to the theatre. You're not dressed or anything. Thank God you don't go on right away. This is a hell of a way to open a show. The star and the producer sitting down on the East Side until it's almost time for the curtain to ring up. Come on. Get your things. We've got to beat it."

"Wait!" She caught hold of Lee and listened.

"What's the matter?"

"They're praying. I want you to listen." The pair moved over to the window.

Black against the softly tinted, autumnal sky the high tenement buildings reared their heads. Little blotches of light spilt from hundreds of windows and lay softly on the gloaming. The street noises were very faint, now. There were few pedestrians on the streets. Only the trolley cars and the trucks broke the Sabbath stillness that hung over the city. All the Ghetto was at Synagogue.

Clear and deep the voice of Jakie Rabinowitz came to them. They stared at each other amazed. Here was the same quality that had been in the voice of Jack Robin that afternoon when he cried his "mammy" song in the theatre. It was the same voice, the same wailing sound, the same rhythm, the same catch in the throat. Mary turned to Lee.

"You are listening to a blackface comedian singing to his God," Mary spoke in awed, hushed tones. "Don't you see, Harry, this isn't so far from Broadway? It's all in his blood, really. Can't you feel the same quality here that you felt this afternoon when he sang? Why he'll have to come back."

"I hope so."

They stood there listening, fascinated. Finally Lee turned. "Come on! We've got to get out of here and uptown." He took Mary's arm, and the two went, closing the door silently behind them.

The multi-colored lights on the Great White Way winked and blinked on the frosty air. Theatres blazoned their wares with vivid brightness of electricity and colored posters. Crowds hastened up and down Broadway—women in gleaming evening dress; men in formal black and white. Taxis honked and hooted their way through the maze of pedestrians.

A steady stream of cabs drew up before the Winter Garden Theatre. They deposited their charges on the wide threshold of the vast pile of stone dedicated to the gaiety of peoples. The theatre-goers in search of an evening of pleasure thronged the lobby and the foyer. Many of them stopped before the large easels filled with photographs. On one side reposed a full length portrait of Mary Dale in ballet costume. Opposite it a portrait of a blackface comedian with the gilt inscription, "Jack Robin."

For a month, now, the "April Follies" had been listed as one of the theatrical successes of the season. But tonight for the first time this portrait of the "jazz" singer decorated the lobby. The press had accepted the announcement made on the opening night of the illness of the comedian with some comment. Whispers as to the real reason for his failure to appear went the rounds, but newer gossip had soon dulled the poignancy of the story. Now, however, with his New York debut at hand a stir of excitement once more rippled along Broadway, and the theatre was crowded with the usual group of first-nighters waiting to pass judgment on this recent discovery of Harry Lee's.

Back stage the usual activities were taking place. The noise of shifting scenery, of mechanics and electricians, battled with the chatter of the chorus girls lined up for the opening number. With regular precision the houselights went down and the curtain came up. The audience chattered vaguely for a moment and then settled into silence.

In the wings stood the blackface comedian awaiting his cue. Beside him stood the golden-haired ballet dancer all set to go on. They looked at each other and smiled. The blackface comedian pressed the ballet dancer's hand.

"Is there anything I can do for you, Jack?" the ballet dancer asked the blackface comedian.

"Yes, just root for me like you always do, Mary," the blackface comedian laughed nervously and squeezed the ballet dancer's hand.

"Ouch," the ballet dancer laughed, too. "That ring hurts—I'm not used to it." They both looked down at the gleaming diamond that glistened on the third finger of the ballet dancer's left hand. "There's your cue. I'll watch from here." The ballet dancer shoved the blackface comedian out onto the stage.

He fell into his shamble and oozed on. The audience applauded vociferously. The orchestra vamped the opening bars. He took up the verse of the song. Then he ran into the chorus.

"And-I-want-you-all-to-know...
I——want——to——go...
Back——to——my——mammy..."
I'm through wanderin'—up—and—down...
I'm ——goin'——to——strike ——that——of'——home——town...
Where——the——folks'll——gather ——round...
An' greet me...
I want——to——go...
Back——to——my——mammy ..."

The house looked black and dark from behind the footlights. There was only one person Jack could see. Up in the box sat Mrs. Rabinowitz in heavy, black silk. As the cry came from across the footlights the blackface comedian's mother wiped a tear from her eyes and smiled. The audience thundered its applause. Again and again Jack took his bows. But all he saw was the figure in the box. He waved and blew a kiss. Mrs. Rabinowitz looked about her proudly. That was her son Jakie. She turned to Yudelson, sitting there beside her, and smiled.

Jack ran off at last. There in the wings stood Mary, waiting. Her eyes were bright, and very, very big and blue. Her nose with that delicious little tip-tilt looked adorable. And her very red mouth with its sensitive contours had never seemed so delectable. They turned and strolled, hand in hand, back to the dressing rooms.

"OLD MOTHER HUBBARD"

Leo Lomski Thinks Fighters Go Into the Ring to Fight

By DAVIS J. WALSH
I. N. S. Sports Editor

NEW YORK, April 13—That crude fellow from the west, Leo Lomski, simply will have to be taken aside and reasoned with in a nice fatherly way. He still thinks that fighters go into the ring to fight. He should know better by this time but apparently Leo is one of those simplex models who are a bit slow to grasp the new idea. Meantime, he is getting approximately nowhere in his quest of a championship title.

I don't say that Leo is deserving of one, at that. As a matter of fact, I rather clearly remember him being buffeted about in an extremely off hand manner by the current light heavyweight champion, Tommy Loughran, and it is my idea that Thomas can repeat the performance at any given, or taken, moment. The point is that there seems to be so little chance of the performance being repeated. Lomski has been cuddled and embraced out of another chance by the affectionate character of the men he has been meeting.

Winning Favor

It all began when he dropped Loughran twice in the first round of their title meeting. Everyone knew that Thomas was a hard man to hit and that, better still, he was a hard man to hurt. Enough! The living of Lomski commenced at that moment.

It is no reflection on Loughran that his was the first and warmest embrace. He had been hit violently upon the chin and didn't know what it was all about for the next four rounds. Instinct alone prompted him to hold as long as he felt himself in trouble.

Later, he punched Lomski all over the ring. But it was distance punching. Any time Leo became intimate, the champion just naturally tied him up like a package.

Leo, of course, likes to get in there before he does his swinging because his arms are short and clubby. It was simply his tough luck that the current champion had too much horse sense to play the game his way.

Luck, too, was against him in the McTigue match. He had been more or less forced to keep away from a veteran who had nothing except knowledge of how to avoid punishment. McTigue had been brash enough when he was in the midst of his fling a year ago but that knockout by Mickey Walker had convinced him it was all over and had sent him back to that old style of his. This consists largely of turning his back to opponent and giving him a large, unresilient shoulder blade for a target.

In consequence, the Lomski-McTigue affair was a terrible thing and the addicts, who had yammered over Leo's frolics with Yale Okun and hundred kindred souls and his knockdowns of Loughran, hastily lost much interest in the young man.

Retreating Fight

His next meeting was with Joe Sekyra. From all accounts, Joseph, too, had taken the matter of Lomski's messy ways to heart. For he is said to have fought a retreating fight most of the way, allowing Lomski to take the play away from him and holding carnestly when he might better have employed his time in hitting. Sekyra's straight punching style gave him a better natural advantage over Leo in this fight but the returns said that the Dayton entry declined to profit by the fact. It apparently wasn't much of a fight on that account.

As a result, Lomski is talking entering the heavyweight division. He is doing so, not because he feels he can't beat Loughran but because he doubts that he will fight him at all. Those uninteresting fights with McTigue and Sekyra have hurt Leo as a drawing card so much that another Loughran-Lomski match has become somewhat impractical from the standpoint of the box office. Incidentally, there may be several other standpoints but I know you will forgive me if I fail to recall just what they are.

Lesson for April 15

TRANSFIGURATION AND SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 9:2-29.
GOLDEN TEXT—He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bear-eth much fruit; for apart from me ye can do nothing.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Shows His Glory.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Shows His Glory.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Faith and Prayer Can Do.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Meaning of the Transfiguration.

When Christ announced His death which was to take place on the cross, the disciples were unable to see how victory could issue from death. Jesus took with Him Peter, James and John into the mountains.

In order to revive their drooping spirits and restore their confidence He was transfigured before them. Two men from the upper world were sent to converse with Jesus about His approaching death at Jerusalem—the very thing about which the disciples refused to talk. The transfiguration is therefore a foregleam of the coming kingdom.

I. Jesus Christ Glorified on the Mountain (v. 2, 3).

He took the disciples "by themselves" and was "transfigured before them." This shows that the purpose of the transfiguration terminated upon the disciples and not on Christ. Christ's rebuke of Peter for his unwillingness to hear concerning His death apparently for a time estranged the disciples from Him. To heal this breach an unusual transaction was required. His shining raiment was typical of that glory which shall be manifest when Christ comes back to the earth. His appearance on the mountain typifies His visible appearance on the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4 9)

II. Peter, James and John Represent Israel in the Flesh in Connection With the Kingdom (v. 2).

Christ is peculiarly the King of Israel. According to Ezekiel 37:21-27, the Israelites are to be the central people of the kingdom. This people shall be gathered from among the nations and united as one in that kingdom, in their own country.

I. Moses and Elias Appeared in Glory With Jesus (vv. 4-13).

These men in the glorified state are typical of the state of the saints in glory. Moses, who was once denied an entrance into Palestine, appears now in glory representing the redeemed of the Lord who shall pass through death into the kingdom. Multitudes of the Lord's own who have fallen asleep shall be awakened at Christ's coming and pass into the kingdom. Elias represents the redeemed who shall pass into the kingdom through translation. Some shall be living upon the earth when the Lord shall come, and they, without dying, shall be changed and thus pass into the kingdom (I Cor. 15:50-53; I Thess. 4:14-18).

1. Peter's proposal (vv. 5, 6).

So definitely was the method of the kingdom unfolded before Peter that he proposed to erect tabernacles for Christ, Moses and Elijah. It is true that the unveiling of the majestic person of Christ and the panoramic display of the kingdom somewhat disconcerted Peter; yet he grasped its central meaning and proposed to celebrate the advent of the kingdom which had been prefigured in a tangible way.

2. The divine voice out of the cloud (vv. 7, 8).

God declared Jesus to be His beloved Son in whom He was well pleased. If one would know what is pleasing to God, let him study Jesus Christ, who perfectly did His Father's will.

3. Jesus' charge (vv. 9-13).

He charged them that they should tell no man concerning the things which they had seen until he had risen from the dead.

IV. A Demonstration of the Purpose of the Establishment of the Kingdom (vv. 14-29).

When they descended from the mountain of transfiguration they witnessed a great multitude in a state of perplexity. The immediate cause of this state was the grievous condition of a young man possessed of a demon (v. 18). The father of the young man had appealed to the disciples to cast the demon out, but they were unable to do so. When they brought him unto Jesus, the foul spirit was rebuked and came forth. This young man's state is representative of the nations who are oppressed by the devil. Just as this young man was grievously oppressed, causing him to cast himself into the fire and into the waters, so the nations today in their perplexity are doing the things which will result in their own destruction. The devil will be peculiarly active in the oppression of men and nations in the last days. This may account for the turmoil among the nations today.

"THE JAZZ SINGER," starring Al Jolson, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel. It is based upon the play by Samson Raphaelson.

SYNOPSIS

Jakie, son of Cantor Rabinowitz, prefering jazz to Synagogue music, leaves home. Ten years elapse. Through Mary Dale, a dancer, Jakie, now Jack Robin, becomes a jazz singer. The Cantor, discovering his son's profession, disowns him. Jack's show opens the Eve of Yom Kippur. Dillings, the backer of the show, withdraws his money, leaving Lee, the producer, dependent on Jack for success. The Cantor is ill. Mrs. Rabinowitz comes to dress rehearsal to beg her son to sing in the Synagogue. Unable to withstand her pleadings Jack returns home. Mary and Lee follow him to dissuade him. But as Jack sings in the temple the Cantor dies.

"If you think that boy's going to be a Cantor all his life you're very much mistaken," Mary answered vehemently. "He'll never stay down here. The trouble now is that he's under a very heavy, mental strain. He can't see things clearly. Wait until he comes to his senses."

"I don't agree with you," Lee sighed. "His career on the stage is ended. He'll never come back. This one incident is going to remain in his mind, and all his life will be one long Day of Atonement. This is in his blood—all this. He won't be able to get away from it."

"Yes, he will," Mary argued. "I'm going to see that he does. Give him another chance. He's a great actor and a great singer

"Root for me, Mary, like you always do."

He's worth while. If I can get him to come back, will you reconsider about sending for Valentine?"

"Oh, I don't know," Lee was weary and tired. He got up and walked about the room. He looked at his watch. "Good Lord, it's almost eight o'clock. Look here. We're opening tonight. We've got to get up to the theatre. You're not dressed or anything. Thank God you don't go on right away. This is a hell of a way to open a show. The star and the producer sitting down on the East Side until it's almost time for the curtain to ring up. Come on. Get your things. We've got to beat it."

"Wait!" She caught hold of Lee and listened.

"What's the matter?"

"They're praying. I want you to listen." The pair moved over to the window.

Black against the softly tinted, autumnal sky the high tenement buildings reared their heads. Little blotches of light spilt from hundreds of windows and lay softly on the gloaming. The street noises were very faint, now. There were few pedestrians on the streets. Only the trolley cars and the trucks broke the Sabbath stillness that hung over the city. All the Ghetto was at Synagogue.

Clear and deep the voice of Jakie Rabinowitz came to them. They stared at each other amazed. Here was the same quality that had been in the voice of Jack Robin that afternoon when he cried his "mammy" song in the theatre. It was the same voice, the same wailing sound, the same rhythm, the same catch in the throat. Mary turned to Lee.

"You are listening to a blackface comedian singing to his God," Mary spoke in awed, hushed tones. "Don't you see, Harry, this isn't so far from Broadway? It's all in his blood, really. Can't you feel the same quality here that you felt this afternoon when he sang? Why he'll have to come back."

"I hope so."

They stood there listening, fascinated. Finally Lee turned. "Come on! We've got to get out of here and uptown." He took Mary's arm, and the two went, closing the door silently behind them.

The multi-colored lights on the Great White Way winked and blinked on the frosty air. Theatres blazoned their wares with vivid brightness of electricity and colored posters. Crowds hastened up and down Broadway—women in gleaming evening dress; men in formal black and white. Taxis honked and hooted their way through the maze of pedestrians.

A steady stream of cabs drew up before the Winter Garden Theatre. They deposited their charges on the wide threshold of the vast pile of stone dedicated to the gaiety of peoples. The theatre-goers in search of an evening of pleasure thronged the lobby and the foyer. Many of them stopped before the large easels filled with photographs. On one side reposed a full length portrait of Mary Dale in ballet costume. Opposite it a portrait of a blackface comedian with the glit inscription, "Jack Robin."

For a month, now, the "April Follies" had been listed as one of the theatrical successes of the season. But tonight for the first time this portrait of the "jazz" singer decorated the lobby. The press had accepted the announcement made on the opening night of the illness of the comedian with some comment. Whispers as to the real reason for his failure to appear went the rounds, but newer gossip had soon dulled the poignancy of the story. Now, however, with his New York debut at hand a stir of excitement once more rippled along Broadway, and the theatre was crowded with the usual group of first-nighters waiting to pass judgment on this recent discovery of Harry Lee's.

Back stage the usual activities were taking place. The noise of shifting scenery, of mechanics and electricians, battled with the chatter of the chorus girls lined up for the opening number. With regular precision the houselights went down and the curtain came up. The audience chattered vaguely for a moment and then settled into silence.

In the wings stood the blackface comedian awaiting his cue. Beside him stood the golden-haired ballet dancer all set to go on. They looked at each other and smiled. The blackface comedian pressed the ballet dancer's hand.

"Is there anything I can do for you, Jack?" the ballet dancer asked the blackface comedian.

"Yes, just root for me like you always do, Mary," the blackface comedian laughed nervously and squeezed the ballet dancer's hand.

"Ouch," the ballet dancer laughed, too. "That ring hurts—I'm not used to it." They both looked down at the gleaming diamond that glistened on the third finger of the ballet dancer's left hand. "There's your cue. I'll watch from here." The ballet dancer shoved the blackface comedian out onto the stage.

He fell into his shamble and oozed on. The audience applauded vociferously. The orchestra vamped the opening bars. He took up the verse of the song. Then he ran into the chorus.

"And-I-want-you-all-to-know...
I——want——to——go...
Back——to——my——mammy..."
I'm through wanderin'—up—and—down...
I'm ——goin'——to——strike ——that——ol'——home——town...
Where——the——folks'll——gather ——round...
An' greeet me...
I want——to——go...
Back——to——my——mammy ..'"

The house looked black and dark from behind the footlights. There was only one person Jack could see. Up in the box sat Mrs. Rabinowitz in heavy, black silk. As the cry came from across the footlights the blackface comedian's mother wiped a tear from her eyes and smiled. The audience thundered its applause. Again and again Jack took his bows. But all he saw was the figure in the box. He waved and blew a kiss. Mrs. Rabinowitz looked about her proudly. That was her son Jakie. She turned to Yudelson, sitting there beside her, and smiled.

Jack ran off at last. There in the wings stood Mary, waiting. Her eyes were bright, and very, very big and blue. Her nose with that delicious little tip-tilt looked adorable. And her very red mouth with its sensitive contours had never seemed so delectable. They turned and strolled, hand in hand, back to the dressing rooms.

Operetta at School

The operetta "Goldilocks," presented by the Franklin Street School, Thursday night, greatly pleased a nearly full auditorium. The dances of the groups, and the colorful costumes were the outstanding features of this delightful and refreshing children's entertainment. The dancers were drilled by Miss Wittich, Miss Lucile Neuding, and Miss Ruth Stout. Mrs. A. J. Lyle was responsible for the costumes, upon which a great deal of the entertainment's success depended.

The first act, was Goldilock's birthday, and the dances of her little friends who came to wish her a happy day, were very pretty. The role of Goldilocks, was played by Betty Jane Leist, who was very winsome in the part, and sang in an unaffected sweet voice.

The second act takes place in the woods, into which Goldilocks has wandered. She falls asleep, and the wood god, Pan, played by Walter Yokum, puts dream drops on her eyes, causing her to have wonderful and beautiful dreams. She dreams of wood nymphs, daisies light bearers violets and bluebells. These, all dance in lovely colored costumes, and make charming woodland scenes.

Goldilocks awakens, and is frightened. She goes to a light that she sees in a distance, and enters the home of the Three Bears. Mother and father bear are "out," but cubby bear is very much "in" with some boy bear friends, who execute a cunning dance, and then go out for a swim. Then Goldilocks arrives, sits in all the chairs, tastes the porridge, and is frightened down the stairs by the return of the bears.

Her mother and father come to her rescue, and when they wish to kill the bears, Goldilocks interferes, and takes home "cubby bear," and so the tale goes she is the first little girl to have a bear to play with.

HALF MILLION GALLONS DAILY USED IN CITY

But It's Water, Folks, Harry Denman, Waterworks Head, Tells Rotarians in Talk

Harry Denman, Superintendent of the local Water Co., told the Rotarians, at their weekly meeting, Thursday noon, how the water reaches Circleville. The water, he said, is first taken through the filtration gallery, into the receiving well and then pumped into the standpipe. The standpipe, holding a half million gallons of water gives a normal pressure of 60 lbs. for the city. The water is carried thru a 16 inch main to Circleville and then distributed through the numerous mains all over the city.

At the present time this company has 1650 services in Circleville and 1100 of these now have meters.

It is the intention of the company to meter all services as soon as possible, and have the meters read every month instead of every three months as now done. In this way the Water Co. can be of assistance in locating leaks in the lines and save the consumer large water bills, from this cause.

Over a half million gallons of water is used daily by the citizens of Circleville. A sample of water is sent to the State Board of Health every week, and with the use of Chlorine for purification, they have not received any reports of contamination.

The members voted in favor of having an inter-city meeting May 10th, at which time the Rotary clubs of Chillicothe, Lancaster, Logan, Greenfield and Washington C. H. would be entertained.

BREMEN FLIGHT

However, all shipping reports indicated that the fliers encountered poor visibility, clouds and headwinds averaging about 30 miles an hour.

From Newfoundland came a meagre report last night that an undescribed plane had been heard passing over Trinity Bay in a southwesterly direction. This report could not be confirmed.

Heard Plane at 8 P. M.

The fliers had stated before their start that they hoped to reach the American mainland early this morning and Mitchel Field, L. I., sometime this afternoon. The unconfirmed Newfoundland report stated that the unidentified plane was heard at 8 o'clock last night.

Another report that the Bremer had been sighted about 800 miles west of Ireland late yesterday was branded as false by officials at the Baldonnel airfield, who declared that at the time of the report they estimated the ship was at least 1500 miles out.

The British air ministry and Lloyds at London have received no news of the plane, they informed International News Service today. Wireless messages received at London from the United States liners America and George Washington stated they had been sweeping the skies with their searchlights since nightfall but had not seen the Bremen.

The distance over the ocean from the west coast of Ireland to Newfoundland is approximately 1800 miles. The plane's cruising speed is 97 miles an hour. Even if this were cut down to 70 miles an hour by headwinds, the plane should have reached the American mainland by 3 a. m. (Eastern Standard time), if it had kept to its course. The fact that the plane has not been definitely sighted at Newfoundland is causing much conjecture.

May Have Changed Course

It is believed possible that the fliers may have encountered storms and changed their course to the southern route instead of continuing on the "great circle." In that case they would not pass over land until reaching Long Island.

Weather conditions at Newfoundland are almost perfect. The sky was clear all night and whatever winds there were, came from the east and were favorable for the fliers. It is not considered likely that the fliers have passed the peninsula without having been sighted.

The Bremen carried sufficient fuel to remain aloft about 45 hours. That deadline will elapse at 9 o'clock tonight. If the ship is forced down, it should be able to stay aloft longer than any other type of land plane, as it has air-tanks in the wings and an air-tight fuselage of steel.

Three previous attempts to span the Atlantic from east to west have ended tragically within the last year with a loss of several lives.

BIRGER GIVEN STAY; INSANITY REASON CITED

Ghostly Arm of Russell Scott Reaches Out in Similar Petition.

By KENT HUNTER
I. N. S. Special Correspondent

BENTON, ILL., April 13 (INS)—The ghostly arm of Russell Scott reached out from the shadowland to which he went as a suicide to bridge the swinging gallows trap-door upon which Charlie Birger, "Scourge of Egypt" and head of the most desperate gang in the criminal annals of Illinois, was to stand today and pay his debt to society.

An exact copy of the insanity plea upon which Scott won a last minute stay of execution, late last night invoked that section of the Illinois criminal law which prohibits the dealing of capital punishment to those of unsound mind.

And today Birger, sitting in his cell, which looks out over the stockade and the thirteen steps to the scaffold upon which he was to have realized the meaning of Friday, the thirteenth, chuckles in alternate fear and scorn.

"It's a break" was his only comment when Jim Pritchard, sheriff of Franklin county, notified him of the action of the state in the local courts and which gives him at least four more days of life.

"But at that" Birger said, "I'd rather walk up those thirteen steps out there than spend the rest of my life with the bats in the belfry."

The action which won Birger his stay came as a surprise and a shock to the friends of Robert H. Scott, executed for the murder of Deputy Sheriff Joseph Piersall.

The attorney appointed by Judge Crawford [illegible] for a stay signed a petition [illegible] for the commutation [illegible] the governor [illegible] Scott was insane [illegible] 12, 1926 [illegible] The petition [illegible] that Scott was [illegible] and a victim of a mental disease and incapable of realizing that he is under sentence of death.

GERMAN GLOOMY OVER ADVENTURE

BERLIN, April 13 —(INS)— —A pessimistic view of the Bremen's flight was taken today by Dr. Fritz Rumpler, one of the best known airplane technicians in Germany. Rumpler said: "The Bremen does not meet the technical demands of a Trans-Atlantic flight. The real Trans-Atlantic plane should be multi-motored and double boated. The lack of news, therefore, is causing anxiety although there is still hope. It is possible that the Bremen was flying above the clouds, preventing it from being seen."

TAKE GLASS FROM STUDENT'S OPTIC

Tom Brunner, whose eye was injured in a laboratory, experiment while at school in Ann Arbor has been having trouble with the optic. A piece of glass was known to be lodged in his eyeball but could not be located until yesterday.

Movement of the eye had changed the position of the glass and made it very difficult to find. Pain, brought on by this changing demanded the services of a doctor. Dr. Stewart, eye specialist, removed the glass.

Operetta at School

The operetta "Goldilocks," presented by the Franklin Street School, Thursday night; greatly pleased a nearly full auditorium. The dances of the groups, and the colorful costumes were the outstanding features of this delightful and refreshing children's entertainment. The dancers were drilled by Miss Wittich, Miss Lucile Neuding, and Miss Ruth Stout. Mrs. A. J. Lyle was responsible for the costumes, upon which a great deal of the entertainment's success depended.

The first act, was Goldilock's birthday, and the dances of her little friends who came to wish her a happy day, were very pretty. The role of Goldilocks, was played by Betty Jane Leist, who was very winsome in the part, and sang in an unaffected sweet voice.

The second act takes place in the woods, into which Goldilocks has wandered. She falls asleep, and the wood god, Pan, played by Walter Yokum, puts dream drops on her eyes, causing her to have wonderful and beautiful dreams. She dreams of wood nymphs, daisies, light bearers, violets and bluebells. These, all dance in lovely colored costumes, and make charming woodland scenes.

Goldilocks awakens, and is frightened. She goes to a light that she sees in a distance, and enters the home of the Three Bears. Mother and father bear are "out," but cubby bear is very much "in" with some boy bear friends, who execute a cunning dance, and then go out for a swim. Then Goldilocks arrives, sits in all the chairs, tastes the porridge, and is frightened down the stairs by the return of the bears.

Her mother and father come to her rescue, and when they wish to kill the bears, Goldilocks interferes, and takes home "cubby bear," and so the tale goes she is the first little girl to have a bear to play with.

HALF MILLION GALLONS DAILY USED IN CITY

But It's Water, Folks, Harry Denman, Waterworks Head, Tells Rotarians in Talk

Harry Denman, Superintendent of the local Water Co., told the Rotarians, at their weekly meeting, Thursday noon, how the water reaches Circleville. The water, he said, is first taken through the filtration gallery, into the receiving well and then pumped into the standpipe. The standpipe, holding a half million gallons of water gives a normal pressure of 60 lbs. for the city. The water is carried thru a 16 inch main to Circleville and then distributed through the numerous mains all over the city.

At the present time this company has 1650 services in Circleville and 1100 of these now have meters.

It is the intention of the company to meter all services as soon as possible, and have the meters read every month instead of every three months as now done. In this way the Water Co. can be of assistance in locating leaks in the lines and save the consumer large water bills, from this cause.

Over a half million gallons of water is used daily by the citizens of Circleville. A sample of water is sent to the State Board of Health every week, and with the use of Chlorine for purification, they have not received any reports of contamination.

The members voted in favor of having an inter-city meeting May 10th, at which time the Rotary clubs of Chillicothe, Lancaster, Logan, Greenfield and Washington C. H. would be entertained.

However, all shipping reports indicated that the fliers encountered poor visibility, clouds and headwinds averaging about 30 miles an hour.

From Newfoundland came a meagre report last night that an undescribed plane had been heard passing over Trinity Bay in a southwesterly direction. This report could not be confirmed.

Heard Plane at 8 P. M.

The fliers had stated before their start that they hoped to reach the American mainland early this morning and Mitchel Field, L. I., sometime this afternoon. The unconfirmed Newfoundland report stated that the unidentified plane was heard at 8 o'clock last night.

Another report that the Bremen had been sighted about 800 miles west of Ireland late yesterday was branded as false by officials at the Baldonnel airfield, who declared that at the time of the report they estimated the ship was at least 1500 miles out.

The British air ministry and Lloyds at London have received no news of the plane, they informed International News Service today. Wireless messages received at London from the United States liners America and George Washington stated they had been sweeping the skies with their searchlights since nightfall but had not seen the Bremen.

The distance over the ocean from the west coast of Ireland to Newfoundland is approximately 1800 miles. The plane's cruising speed is 97 miles an hour. Even if this were cut down to 70 miles an hour by headwinds, the plane should have reached the American mainland by 3 a. m., (Eastern Standard time), if it had kept to its course. The fact that the plane has not been definitely sighted at Newfoundland is causing much conjecture.

May Have Changed Course

It is believed possible that the fliers may have encountered storms and changed their course to the southern route instead of continuing on the "great circle." In that case they would not pass over land until reaching Long Island.

Weather conditions at Newfoundland are almost perfect. The sky was clear all night and whatever winds there were, came from the east and were favorable for the fliers. It is now considered likely that the fliers have passed the peninsula without having been sighted.

BIRGER GIVEN STAY; INSANITY REASON CITED

Ghostly Arm of Russell Scott Reaches Out in Similar Petition.

By KENT HUNTER
I. N. S. Special Correspondent

BENTON, ILL., April 13—The ghostly arm of Russell Scott reached out from the shadowland to which he went as a suicide to bridge the swinging gallows trapdoor upon which Charlie Birger, "Scourge of Egypt" and head of the most desperate gang in the criminal annals of Illinois, was to stand today and pay his debt to society.

An exact copy of the insanity plea upon which Scott won a last minute stay of execution, late last night invoked that section of the Illinois criminal law which prohibits the dealing of capital punishment to those of unsound mind.

And today Birger, sitting in his cell, which looks out over the stockade and the thirteen steps to the scaffold upon which he was to have realized the meaning of Friday, the thirteenth, chuckles in alternate fear and scorn.

"It's a break," was his only comment when Jim Pritchard, ex-soldier sheriff of Franklin county, notified him of the action taken in the local courts and which guarantees him at least four more days of life.

"But at that," Birger said, "I'd rather walk up those thirteen steps out there than spend the rest of my life with the nuts at Chester."

The action which won Birger his stay came as a surprise move and a last ditch red out of Attorney Robert E. Smith of the defense.

The attorney appeared before Judge Charles H. Miller at 9 o'clock at night and filed the petition for a stay, signed by Nathan Birger, a nephew of the man who had heard for two days the drums of doom, the hammering of carpenters' hammers erecting his death perch.

The petition charged that Birger, since his incarceration in the Franklin county jail, after his conviction at Quincy for the murder of Mayor Joe Adams of West City on Dec. 12, 1926, has become insane. The petition charged that Birger is a lunatic, that he is a victim of a mental disease and incapable of realizing that he is under sentence of death.

The Bremen carried sufficient fuel to remain aloft about 45 hours. That deadline will elapse at 9 o'clock tonight. If the ship is forced down, it should be able to stay aloft longer than any other type of land plane, as it has air-tanks in the wings and an air-tight fuselage of steel.

Three previous attempts to span the Atlantic from east to west have ended tragically within the last year with a loss of several lives.

GERMAN GLOOMY OVER ADVENTURE

BERLIN, April 13—(INS)—A pessimistic view of the Bremen's flight was taken today by Dr. Fritz Rumpler, one of the best known airplane technicians in Germany. Rumpler said: "The Bremen does not meet the technical demands of a Trans-Atlantic flight. The real Trans-Atlantic plane should be multi-motored and double boated. The lack of news, therefore, is causing anxiety although there is still hope. It is possible that the Bremen was flying above the clouds, preventing it from being seen."

SPORTSMATTER

BY FRANK GETTY

American swimmers are going out after the laurels now worn by Arne Borg of Sweden and Andire Charleton of Australia.

Competition in the swimming events at Amsterdam promises to be quite as keen as that in track and field.

In the sprint events, thanks to Johnny Weismuller, successor to Duke Kohanamoku, the United States always has managed to keep ahead, but at distances from 300 yards up to the mile, Borg, the Swede, holds the official records with one exception.

Since the last Olympic games, in which American swimmers were so successful, records have been broken in this country with monotonous regularity. Hardly a single swimming meet within the past four years but has been marked by a broken world's record or two.

The girls have been as bad as the boys in that respect, but Weismuller, Walter Laufer and Walter Spence have lowered one record after another as fast as they swam.

Officials who keep track of the swimming records are at their wits end to register the changes. In track and field, when a claim for a new record is entered, there is usually time to consider it carefully, weight the merits of the performance and pass it along for judgment in the international federation. In swimming, where a new world's record or two are created every time one of these human fish falls overboard, there is practically no opportunity to deliberate upon the performance.

"There'll be a better one next week," the officials say to one another and let the matter rest.

At Amsterdam, competition in swimming will be particularly keen, because several European nations feel that here is one sport at which they can defeat the United States.

The Swedes are particularly able swimmers, and Arne Borg has been doing well this winter. He got into trouble in Germany recently because of his antics, which displeased the serious-minded German sports writers.

The Australians, looking forward to fea laurels at Amsterdam, probably will send Charleton back to us this summer, and there is one young man from "down under" who knows his sea weed.

The number and strength of the American team, however, assures us of victory. Then there are the girls who are bound to clean up in fancy diving and swimming.

There has been a sort of Olympic fervor sweeping England during the month, ever since the necessary money to send a team to Amsterdam was acquired by popular subscription, but the British still are hesitant over just what teams to send. They had planned for a swimming team, but someone raised the question of America's supremacy and the British thought possibly they had better concentrate upon something at which they had a chance.

POOR WEATHER HURTING EARLY BASEBALL GAMES

PROPONENT OF LATER GAMES HAS INNINGS

Gate Receipts Again Stirring Up Those Who Want Later Season.

By DAVIS J. WALSH
I. N. S. Sports Editor

NEW YORK, April 13—Proponents of the idea that it is better to see a ball game in your decollete shirt sleeves than feel it in your marrow were armed today with significant evidence that the baseball season is being started neither wisely nor too late. At least five of the eight inaugurals on Wednesday were made almost untenable from the standpoint of physical comfort because the [illegible] and yesterday the four scheduled games of the east were allowed to go by default because of rain, chill and, in one instance, snow.

Want Later Start

For some years, there has been agitation in certain quarters for a later start in the major leagues, both as an aid to the noble athletes who welter in the south so that they may congeal in the north as quickly as possible and as a boon to the populace. These reasons, of course, are stated strictly in the order of their importance.

But, whatever the final reason may be, the time will come when baseball will set its calendar back by a matter of ten days or more on its own initiative. It won't do so because it finds it is unnecessarily subjecting its ball players to physical risks. Neither is it likely to take cognizance of the fact that sooner or later some mugg will have to be cut out of his overcoat and hung in the steak room until conscious or even sober. Those sort of things are a bit unromantic, but a baseball man doesn't let that bother him. He is highly sympathetic by nature, of course, and just can't help it that his sympathy is something with which he prefers to burden only himself. The sight of an empty seat will cause him to condole with himself by the hour.

Played to 198,517

I take it, therefore, that he was all but heart-broken on Wednesday. The eight openings played to 198,517 patients, as we say in the outer office. On a more propitious occasion, they might have numbered as many as 275,000. At the polo grounds, for example, Rogers Hornsby versus the Giants, grossed 35,000; the attendance on a fair day might have been 55,000. In Philadelphi, they had Ruth, Gehrig, Cobb and Speaker in the same ball game and the turnstiles showed only 20,000 against a possible capacity of 35,000. There must have been a lot of keepers among those 20,000, at least.

In Brooklyn, the attendance was 12,000, whereas, on an ordinary Sunday in May, the first 35,000 get in the park and the others pile up in great disorder in the doorway.

Row of Empties

These rows of empty seats speak the only language that is intelligible to the magnate. He insists on the early start because he fears the loss of a few patients who, lacking consideration, might go and die on him between April 11 and April 20. He likewise rushes the season because he thinks he might get a break on the weather and can prove that he did, back in 1889. He wrongs himself greatly on both points.

In the first place, the supply of patients between April 20 and October 1 will be just as great because the games will be as many — thanks to the double-headers that inevitably follow these April postponements. In the second place, our seasons have definitely changed so much that he doesn't figure to get a break on the weather in any early April game. We now have a climate of so called "open winters." These usually mean open springs—open like a cloud burst.

DERBYISTS IN WESTERN CITY FOR GREETING

Oklahoma City Pays Tribute to Favorite Son, Leader in Race.

By LELAND C. LEWIS
I. N. S. Special Correspondent

EL RENO, April 13 —C. C. "Cross-Country" Pyle's Bunion derbyists emerges from the sage bush circuit that they have played for almost six weeks to play a big time engagement at Oklahoma City today.

The eighty-two runners and walkers, their road toggery freshly laundered, set out of El Reno with 33 miles ahead of them and the state fair grounds at Oklahoma City where advance preparations were made to handle a crowd of 30,000 people. Immediately after sending the pedestrains on their way, the flagship, reconditioned after its recent bridge crash, and other vehicles of the Pyle caravan pushed on ahead for the Oklohoma metropolis, where they were welcomed by Governor Henry Johnston, of Oklahoma, state and civic officials. Subsequently the entire cavalcade joined in a monster parade about Oklahoma City.

Oklahoma City's tribute to Andrew Payne, that state's favorite son and leader in the race with an elapsed time of 446:49:31 for the 1,450 miles from Los Angeles to El Reno, was seen in probably the largest assemblage for a sporting event in the state's history.

A half holiday was declared in the city; schools were dismissed; business houses and stores were closed.

Payne now has an edge of one hour, 30 minutes, 19 seconds over Peter Gavuzzi, Southampton, England, and holds second place. John Salo, Passaic, N. J., is third, 18 hours, 21 minutes, 31 seconds behind Gavuzzi.

LINDBERGH SHOWS FLIGHT INTEREST

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., April 13—(INS) —The man who first spanned the Atlantic by air has nothing but admination and heartfelt wishes for Captain Hermann Koehl and his companions in the Junkers monoplane Bremen.

Upon hearing the news that the Bremen was winging its way to American shores, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh evidenced deep concern over the chances for success in the latest attempt to fly across the Atlantic in a westward direction, according to reports today from the Montecito estate of Mrs. Laura J. Knight, near here, where the Lone Eagle is resting.

"I sure hope they make it," Col. Lindbergh is reported to have said. "Those boys have nerve, considering what has happened to the others who tried to fly westward over the Atlantic."

He is reported to have concluded his comment on the Bremen's flight with an expression of hope that the three flyers land safely in New York.

DERBYISTS IN WESTERN CITY FOR GREETING

Oklahoma City Pays Tribute to Favorite Son, Leader in Race.

By LELAND C. LEWIS
I. N. S. Special Correspondent

EL RENO, April 13 —C. C. "Cross-Country" Pyle's Bunion derbyists emerges from the sage bush circuit that they have played for almost six weeks to play a big time engagement at Oklahoma City today.

The eighty-two runners and walkers, their road toggery freshly laundered, set out of El Reno with 33 miles ahead of them and the state fair grounds at Oklahoma City where advance preparations were made to handle a crowd of 30,000 people. Immediately after sending the pedestrains on their way, the flagship, reconditioned after its recent bridge crash, and other vehicles of the Pyle caravan pushed on ahead for the Oklahoma metropolis, where they were welcomed by Governer Henry Johnston, of Oklahoma, state and civic officials. Subsequently the entire cavalcade joined in a monster parade about Oklahoma City.

Oklahoma City's tribute to Andrew Payne, that state's favorite son and leader in the race with an elapsed time of 206:49:31 for the 1,450 miles from Los Angeles to El Reno, was seen in probably the largest assemblage for a sporting event in the state's history.

A half holiday was declared in the city; schools were dismissed; business houses and stores were closed.

Payne now has an edge of one hour, 30 minutes, 19 seconds over Peter Gavuzzi, Southampton, England, and holds second place. John Salo, Passaic, N. J., is third, 18 hours, 21 minutes, 31 seconds behind Gavuzzi.

LINDBERGH SHOWS FLIGHT INTEREST

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., April 13—(INS)—The man who first spanned the Atlantic by air has nothing but admiration and heartfelt wishes for Captain Hermann Koehl and his companions in the Junkers monoplane Bremen.

Upon hearing the news that the Bremen was winging its way to American shores, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh evidenced deep concern over the chances for success in the latest attempt to fly across the Atlantic in a westward direction, according to reports today from the Montecito estate of Mrs. Laura J. Knight, near here, where the Lone Eagle is resting.

"I sure hope they make it," Col. Lindbergh is reported to have said. "Those boys have nerve, considering what has happened to the others who tried to fly westward over the Atlantic."

He is reported to have concluded his comment on the Bremen's flight with an expression of hope that the three flyers land safely in New York.

SPORTSMATTER

BY FRANK GETTY

American swimmers are going out after the laurels now worn by Arne Borg of Sweden and Antire Charleton of Australia.

Competition in the swimming events at Amsterdam promises to be quite as keen as that in track and field.

In the sprint events, thanks to Johnny Weismuller, successor to Duke Kohanamoku, the United States always has managed to keep ahead, but at distances from 300 yards up to the mile, Borg, the Swede, holds the official records with one exception.

Since the last Olympic games, in which American swimmers were so successful, records have been broken in this country with monotonous regularity. Hardly a single swimming meet within the past four years but has been marked by a broken world's record or two.

The girls have been as bad as the boys in that respect, but Weismuller, Walter Laufer and Walter Spence have lowered one record after another as fast as they swam.

Officials who keep track of the swimming records are at their wits end to register the changes. In track and field, when a claim for a new record is entered, there is usually time to consider it carefully, weight the merits of the performance and pass it along for judgment in the international federation. In swimming, where a new world's record or two are created every time one of these human fish falls overboard, there is practically no opportunity to deliberate upon the performance.

"There'll be a better one next week," the officials say to one another and let the matter rest.

At Amsterdam, competition in swimming will be particularly keen, because several European nations feel that here is one sport at which they can defeat the United States.

The Swedes are particularly able swimmers, and Arne Borg has been doing well this winter. He got into trouble in Germany recently because of his antics, which displeased the serious-minded German sports writers.

The Australians, looking forward to few laurels at Amsterdam, probably will send Charleton back to us this summer, and there is one young man from "down under" who knows his sea weed.

The number and strength of the American team, however, assures us of victory. Then there are the girls who are bound to clean up, both in fancy diving and swimming.

There has been a sort of Olympic fervor sweeping England during the month, ever since the necessary money to send a team to Amsterdam was acquired by popular subscription, but the British still are hesitant over just what teams to send. They had planned for a swimming team, but someone raised the question of America's supremacy and the British thought possibly they had better concentrate upon something at which they had a chance.

PREDICTS USE OF TANKS FOR NEXT BIG WAR

Major-General Fries Declares They Will Be More in Demand.

DAYTON, O., April 13—(INS)—Major General Amos A. Fries, head of the chemical warfare division predicts the more general use of tanks in the next year than in the last one. He also predicts the more general use of gas in the future. The only problem confronting armies now is to get the gas into enemy trenches. That was the problem in the late unpleasantness which was so costly.

He came here to attend the dedication of the new Masonic Temple and on behalf of the Sojourners club, a national organization made up of army officers, retired and active who are Master Masons.

He discounts the wholesale destruction of cities by gas to a great extent because of the inability to get it spread out over the cities— a problem which he said was similar to that encountered in actual combat.

He said that one ton of mustard gas was so potential that it could put 22,000,000 men out of action if it could be delivered where its potentiality could be most effective.

He declares the complete surprise of attack in warfare is largely overdrawn. To illustrate the point he told of a trip he made July 18, 1918, the day before the Chauteau Thierry drive was started. Although at the head of a division he did not know when the "big push" would start. And neither did the Germans, although every one sensed the fact that something was going to happen in a few hours.

As war becomes more mechanical he said the man who uses his head and protective measures has a better chance. He then disclosed that a gas mask is being perfected for the government which is worn in comparative comfort and that the wearers can carry on a conversation.

NOTED FLIER IS WITH U. S. TIRES

Clarence D. Chamberlin, transatlantic flyer and noted throughout the world as one of the most skillful of the air men, has been retained by the United States Rubber Company as a consultant in the development of airplane tires.

The Company has embarked on an airplane tire program which has for its object the development of airplane tires constructed on the most scientific lines and an active sales effort to place them in a conspicuous position on the market.

Joseph A. Faucher, another well known flyer, has been appointed Manager Airplane Tire Sales.

Mr. Chamberlin's first active work will be the use of U. S. Airplane Tires on the long tour about the United States he is now making. This tour will take him to every State in the Union. Says Americans Have Right Idea On Real Beauty

VIENNA, April 13 — (INS) — "Americans have a real longing for beauty and art, which, supported by their material wealth, offers a hitherto unknown opportunity to all artists."

This statement was made here today by Max Reinhardt, famous Austrian impressario, who has just returned from the United States. He continued:

"America is the ideal country for active artists. If I were ten years younger I would not hesitate to make the United States my permanent home.

"Of course, special conditions and needs have found their special expression in American art. According to my opinion, architecture and the dance are the two most characteristic forms of art in America. American architecture is naive, grandiose and new. American dancing is rather sportive, but rythmical and unique.

"Dancing has been reformed and democratized in America. Everybody loves dancing, and they dance as naturally and as devotedly as Europeans play the piano or other musical instruments. I am tempted to say that Americans are primarily seeking art through their feet.

"I am going back to the United States next year when I will lecture at Columbia University. I shall direct a series of new plays and probably supervise the production of a new film—if I find the right scenario.

"I do not want to make an average film. I am in search of poetry in moving pictures and I hope I shall be able to realize my ideas in Hollywood, where Charlie Chaplin already has proved that the film can be real art. Chaplin, indeed, makes poems in pictures. He is the only film-poet I know. I think he is one of the greatest artists America has ever produced."

A BLOW OUT

Did you hear about the surprise the M. E. Sunday school at Tarlton had? Well, listen! Most of the women didn't even know their men folks could even make coffee, and last Friday evening when the Men's Bible Class invited the Sunday School to be their guests, they not only had coffee that was ambrosia, but hot dogs and cakes and pickles and more kinds of eggs than old Biddy ever dreamed of. Although the eats were a pleasant surprise it wasn't the most important because they had a program that was above par. Even if Mr. Grice was a little crippled up from baseball he didn't fail to respond with his little speech, and we wouldn't want it remarked about, but Mr. Theodore Spangler's talk brought a more fervent amen than Rev. Woodard's, but the Rev. didn't seem to feel bad about it, and if Mr. Hiatt's solo was given without any practice, we would like to hear him when he had had some. And their choir of 18 men would sound pretty nice any Sunday morning. All had a good time and plenty to eat. Even Willis Mowery said he could hold no more so we suppose the cooks didn't neglect themselves. The whole Sunday School hopes they will strut their stuff again.

PREDICTS USE OF TANKS FOR NEXT BIG WAR

Major-General Fries Declares They Will Be More in Demand.

DAYTON, O., April 13—(INS)—Major General Amos A. Fries, head of the chemical warfare division predicts the more general use of tanks in the next year than in the last one. He also predicts the more general use of gas in the future. The only problem confronting armies now is to get the gas into enemy trenches. That was the problem in the late unpleasantness which was so costly.

He came here to attend the dedication of the new Masonic Temple and on behalf of the Sojourners club, a national organization made up of army officers, retired and active who are Master Masons.

He discounts the wholesale destruction of cities by gas to a great extent because of the inability to get it spread out over the cities— a problem which he said was similar to that encountered in actual combat.

He said that one ton of mustard gas was so potential that it could put 22,000,000 men out of action if it could be delivered where its potentiality could be most effective.

He declares the complete surprise of attack in warfare is largely overdrawn. To illustrate the point he told of a trip he made July 18, 1918, the day before the Chauteau Thierry drive was started. Although at the head of a division he did not know when the "big push" would start. And neither did the Germans, although every one sensed the fact that something was going to happen in a few hours.

As war becomes more mechanical he said the man who uses his head and protective measures has a better chance. He then disclosed that a gas mask is being porfected for the government which is worn in comparative comfort and that the wearers can carry on a conversation.

CENSORSHIP

SOME persons take the ground that people should be at liberty to produce any kind of a magazine, book, or play, without any censorship whatever. They feel that these rights are essential to the liberty of free speech. They are fearful that if the government is given the power to interfere with any kind of publication on account of its indecency or revolutionary character, soon the government will be interfering with any form of criticism of itself, so that it will be impossible to accomplish reforms.

It is difficult to draw the line which would exclude publications and performances of an indecent and revolutionary character, and at the same time preserve the right to make legitimate criticism of the acts of public officials.

If there was no censorship whatever of printed material and entertainment performances, there is no limit to the vulgarity of which many people would be guilty. The printing presses would be flooded with dirt, many theatrical performances would be of the same course character, and the minds of the young people would be contaminated by the lowest forms of appeal. Such a toleration of abuses would injure our moral standards and family life.

Also the country would be full of revolutionary agitation. The emissaries of countries like Russia would be boring into our labor organizations and creating industrial disturbances. There are limits beyond which the right of free speech can not be permitted to go.

Yet we must sacredly preserve the right of legitimate criticism. The government can not make any progress, unless the people have the right to point out what they feel are its faults. But certainly our courts in Ohio and elsewhere should be capable of performing this task of discrimination honestly and intelligently.

TRADING AT HOME

THE idea used to prevail among a good many people that they had to go to large cities in order to obtain the latest goods in the way of clothing, house furnishings, etc. But if there ever was any basis for that idea, it has passed by in these times, when the retail stores in such a place as Circleville are run in such a very modern way, with thoroughly up to date goods, and according to the latest trade ideas.

It will be found that our stores change their stocks rapidly, and they keep closely in touch with the styles and customs of the day. Goods are standardized so much now, that you get about the same thing in any city. Salesmen visit all the cities from the same wholesale houses, and they see to it that their customers get the latest goods.

The buyers from our stores visit wholesale houses to see what are the things that are selling the best in the country at large. They get the newest ideas on styles and sales methods from these wholesale houses and from the trade papers, which they watch closely.

Why under these conditions people should go away from home to buy goods is a good deal of mystery. The old saying had it that distance lends enchantment to the view, and it is certainly that way with some folks in regard to goods. Some people will pass over some article offered by a home store, and probably pay more money for it, and then come home and brag to their neighbors about it.

The great majority of our people appreciate the very fine service rendered by our home stores, and do not see why they should go elsewhere for service that is to be had at home.

Ideas are funny little things. They won't work unless you do.—Xenia, O., Gazette.

Hasn't hair,
But I've never seen

That there really
Is no other;
Seems to me,
A crude old bachelor,
That they haven't

Not a hair nor

But there must
Be something to him
'Cause my sister
Says that he

And what we mean to say
Is,

It is a scientific fact, Bob Ryder discovered, that certain low forms of animal life can be changed from male to female by the administration of certain foods to them and we've about made up our mind to give up lettuce sandwiches and mayonnaise and be on the safe side.

We'd give them up anyhow, without much trouble.

We have often wondered why they call admirals rear admirals in many instances, although we've seen a number of cases in the recent war why lieutenants ought to be called rear lieutenants.

Miss Files: Certainly—(and produces it in two seconds).

Chief Clerk: That's it, all right. But where did you have it filed?

Miss Files: Why, there's only one possible place—right here under "Dead Freight."—Sent in by R. R.

Love's Embers

Absorbing Sequel to "Revelations of a Wife"

—By Adele Garrison—

Philip Veritzen Reveals His Royal Ancestry to Madge.

PHILIP VERITZEN'S keen eyes were fixed upon me quizzically as I parried the personal note in his little speech with the warning against delay in his plans for guarding Princess Olina of Transvania. When I finished he laughed softly but with patent malicious enjoyment of the confusion I could not hide from him.

"You are too transparent to essay Machiavellian roles," he told me. "But I'll respect for the present your desire to have me avoid all references to yourself as I tell you this story of my youth. But don't worry about the Princess. You tell me there are plenty of people there now, and there really is no fear of daylight marauders. And when darkness comes, Noel, Otto and I will be outside her door."

There was just a touch of pomposity in his manner, an intangible reminder that he neither needed nor wished advice concerning his plans. It was a mannerism I had seen before, one which everyone connected with him professionally knew well. With the feeling that my employer was looking at me as he might at some off specimen of beetle impaled for his inspection, I tried to keep my face free of any other emotion than eager interest in his story.

"I have told you that I was born in Transvania," Mr. Veritzen began with a hesitation utterly foreign to him, "but what I never have told anyone before is that because of the 'bar sinister' I am a cousin twice removed of the present King of Transvania."

Despite my resolution to be poised and silent, a little exclamation of stark amazement escaped from me. This, then, was the explanation of the many seemingly inexplainable contradictions in the man, as if two natures warred within him, and of the indefinable air of one "born to the purple," which he were whether consciously or unconsciously, I could not even now determine.

"You understand me better now," Mr. Veritzen said softly. "I think your comprehension would be even better if you could have known my strange boyhood with its cruel heritage.

"My grandfather and the present king of Transvania's grandsire were brothers," he went on after a pause. "But my grandmother was the daughter of a merchant, well-to-do, but as utterly outside the pale of a royal marriage connection as a peasant would have been."

His lips twisted grimly upon the word "peasant," and I realized that the man's whole nature was consumed with resentment against the cards Fate had dealt him in the matter of ancestry.

"She was remarkably beautiful, my grandmother, I have been told, and she held my royal grandfather's allegiance through all his life, though he married a member of another royal house and had several other children besides the son who was the only child of my beautiful grandmother. The boy did not inherit his mother's looks, however, but was so much like his father and especially so closely resembled his cousin, the present king's father, that the old king, my grandfather's brother, insisted that my grandmother and her son be sent to a distant province and kept there. Several years after my grandfather died my grandmother married a man who long had loved her, and who formally adopted her nameless boy and gave him his name of Veritzen. So at least I have the legal right to that name."

The bitterness in his voice had increased as if the recital of that old story had roused anew the passion of resentment against the lot which had been his in his youth.

"My father, Noel Veritzen—I gave my own boy his name—never troubled the court, though he was possessed of some wealth and married the daughter of one of the noble families of Transvania. He died when I was a little chap, and fortunately for my mother's desire to see the capital of her country and to mingle with her own people. I resembled her, bearing no embarrassing likeness to the men of the royal family. So she came to the capital, and after completing my schooling and my military service, I was assigned, through the influence of one of my mother's friends, to special duty at the court. It was the occasion of the first visit to the court of the beautiful young princess who was later to become the present Queen of Transvania. And I, like the hot-headed romantic young fool that I was, fell desperately in love with her."
